OXFORDSHIRE.

Oxfordshire, sometimes called Oxon, is an inland shire; it lies along the north shore of the Thames, the windings of which it follows, and it is, therefore, very irregular in shape, being in some places only 7 miles across, and in others, as in the north-west, 28; its greatest length is about 50 miles; it runs in a north-west and south-east direction, having its longest dimensions on the river side; it contains 752 square miles, or about 470,095 acres, and had a population in 1851 of 170,439; in 1861 of 170,944; in 1871, 177,975; and in 1881, 179,650, viz., males, 88,049; females, 91,601: the number of houses were—inhabited, 38,165; uninhabited, 2,824; building, 235.

The county in the Pre-Roman era formed part of the territory of the Dobuni, but was included by the Romans in the province of Britannia Prima. Notable Druidical remains exist at Little Rollright, near Chipping Norton, while Roman remains exist at Dorchester, Chadlington, Alcester and Bicester, a Roman villa at North Leigh, and portions of Watling street and Icknield street traverse or enter the county. Soon after the departure of the Romans it was conquered by the Saxons and became part of the Mercia kingdom; battles were fought at Benson, Banbury, Eynsham and Bampton; a small portion (Bampton and neighbourhood) being held by the King of Wessex, numerous battles took place between the rival Kings, notably at Bicester, Burford and Bensington. In the seventh century St. Birinus of Rome was created first Bishop of Dorchester, and included both kingdoms in his diocese. In the Danish incursions this county suffered severely, Oxford and Thame were destroyed; numerous earthworks of this period remain. At the Norman conquest the county submitted quietly with the exception of Oxford, and the prosperity of the latter place consequently declined until the founding of Oseney Abbey on the Isis, to which the residence of the Bishop was removed from Dorchester. The Bishopric was afterwards transferred to Lincoln, and again removed to Oxford and separately endowed by Henry VIII.

Oxfordshire is bounded on the north by Warwickshire and by the river Cherwell and Northamptonshire,—on the east by Buckinghamshire,—on the south by the Thames and Berkshire,—and on the west by Gloucestershire; it is a country having a very varied surface, from the lowlands of the river to high and bare chalk hills: it belongs partly to the secondary formations and partly to the chalk, and is traversed by the Chiltern Hills from south-east to north-east, and by other ranges. The soil on the river bank is a rich black mould,—in north Oxfordshire it is a very fertile red earth or clay,—in the midland district it is a decomposed stonebrash or limestone, with sand and loam,—and in the Chilterns, or south-east, it is a sandy loam laid on the chalk. The rivers are numerous, and mostly belong to the basin of the Thames, which is the chief waterway: this river is popularly called the Thames throughout its course, but is properly the Isis until after the junction of the Thame: it enters the county at Lechlade, being navigable for vessels of ninety tons; its winding course forms the boundary of the county down to Henley. The Thame flows from Buckinghamshire past Thame and crosses Oxfordshire, past Dorchester, to its junction with the Isis between Day's lock and Shillingford bridge: after this junction the Isis is properly called the Thames. The Windrush rises in Gloucestershire, in the Cotswold Hills, passes Burford and Witney, to the Isis. The Cherwell comes from Northamptonshire, enters Oxfordshire in the north near Claydon, and runs to the Isis near Oxford. The Evenlode rises in Worcestershire, and after receiving the Glyme near Woodstock, falls into the Isis about 4 miles from Oxford. The river Ray falls into the Cherwell. The Oxford canal enters the county at Banbury, and passes by the Cherwell to Oxford; it was begun in 1790, and is 91 miles long. By the Thames and the canals Oxfordshire has water communication to every part of England.

The chief railway is the Great Western, which does not, however, enter the shire, but follows the other bank of the Thames; it sends off branches from Didcot to Oxford, and from Twyford by Shiplake to Henley. From Oxford are lines in connection with the Great Western to Chipping Norton, Evesham, Worcester, Droitwich, Kidderminster, Dudley and Wolverhampton; to Warwick and Birmingham, passing Woodstock and Banbury; from Oxford also are branches to Thame, Princes Risborough, Aylesbury and Winslow, joining the North Western at the latter place and the main line of the Great Western at Maidenhead. A line is now open from Cheltenham to Chipping Norton.

The East Gloucestershire railway extends from Oxford through Witney to Lechlade and Fairford, Gloucestershire, and the company have power to continue it to Cheltenham, taking in its route the fertile agricultural district of the Colne Valley.

The London and North Western railway has a line from Bletchley, through Bicester, to Oxford; and from Winslow, on this line, is a branch through Buckingham and Brackley to Banbury.

From Watlington a line has been made to Princes Risborough by the Watlington and Princes Risborough Railway company.

The county is connected with the whole of the southern system of railways by the Great Western, South Western and South Eastern lines.

The climate of Oxfordshire is healthy, but rather colder than other southern parts of England. Large crops are raised of wheat, barley, oats, turnips, lentils, rape, cabbages, carrots, potatoes, chicory and rhubarb. In the many rich meadows on the banks of the river and streams cattle are fed; cheese is made. Many of the hills are wooded and a good deal of copse wood is sent down the river; on the hills sheep are fed; some good hogs are also bred. The mineral productions are some coarse building stone, flints, Oxford clay (now little used for pottery), lime, slate and ochre (from Shotover Forest). The manufactures are blankets at Witney; plush, shag and girth weaving and agricultural implements, portable engines &c. at Banbury; and gloves and polished steel at Woodstock; tweeds are made at Chipping Norton, and there are paper mills on the banks of the Thames; lace is made by the country women. Chair making and turning are carried on to some extent, principally at Stokenchurch and Chinnor, near Tetsworth.

Oxfordshire is in the Oxford circuit and the province of Canterbury, diocese and archdeaconry of Oxford, subdivided into the rural deaneries of Aston, Bicester, Chipping Norton, Cuddesdon, Deddington, Henley, Islip, Oxford and Witney. The shire town is Oxford. There are fourteen hundreds, a city, twelve market towns, and about 273 parishes. The county has one court of quarter sessions and ten petty sessional divisions.

The county of Oxford sends three members to Parliament. The Parliamentary boroughs are—

	Members.	Pop. 1881.
Oxford City,	two	40,862
Oxford University,	two
Banbury,	one	12,072
Woodstock,	one	7,027

The Municipal boroughs are—Banbury, population in 1881, 3,600, Chipping Norton, 4,167, Henley, 4,604, and Oxford, 35,929. Other towns are Bicester, 3,306, Burford, 1,312, Thame, 3,267, Watlington, 1,814, Witney, 3,017, and Woodstock, 1,133.

Oxford is a well-built city on the Thames. It is remarkable for its university, and is also the see of a bishop.

Dorchester was the Roman station Durocina, and the seat of the bishop of the West Saxons and Mid-English.

The superintendent registrars' districts are—

The Oxfordshire and Berkshire County Lunatic Asylum, a large stone building, is situated at Littlemore, near Oxford; Richard Henry Heurtly Sankey, resident medical superintendent; Rev. George Henry Elwell B.A. chaplain; T. M. Davenport esq. clerk of committee; Robert Bryning, steward and clerk.

Her Majesty's Prison, erected in 1805, at a cost of about £19,000, from designs by Mr. Blackburn, architect; the buildings are placed immediately within the southern precincts of Oxford Castle, and have incorporated with them some portion of the ancient fortress, at the extreme southwest corner stands the famous Saxon tower, generally known as "Mand's tower," and once forming the chief of a series of six placed at different angles of the castle walls; there is a round turret at the south-east angle, and the parapet is crenellated; about 70 feet from this tower is a small but highly interesting Saxon crypt, 20 feet square, with a vaulted roof, supported on dwarf columns, with elongated and singularly carved capitals; forming part of the western boundary of the castle is the great mound, raised in the ninth century for the double purpose of defence and observation; the ancient vaulted well is 54 feet deep from the floor of the well room, or from the summit of the mound about 70 feet; the whole mount is now thickly grown with large trees. A tablet in the courtyard, erected in 1877 by J. M. Davenport esq. Clerk of the Peace, records the "Black Assize" of July, 1577, when the Lord Chief Baron, the High Sheriff, and about 300 other persons died from a sudden outbreak of gaol fever. The prison was enlarged in 1858, by converting the governor's residence into a ward for female prisoners, and erecting a new house for the governor: Robert Dickson Crinkshank, governor; Rev. Joseph Knight Newton, chaplain.

Coroners for the County—C. D. Faulkner, Deddington (Northern district); W. W. Robinson, Oxford (Central district); F. Westell, Witney (Western district); H. Dixon, Watlington (Southern district); the Mayor of Woodstock (Woodstock Borough district).

IMPORTANT WORKS OR PAPERS ON LOCAL GEOLOGY.—1859. Hull, E.—South-Easterly Attenuation of the Lower Secondary Rocks, and Probable Depth of the Coal-measures under Oxfordshire. Journ. Geol. Soc., vol. xvi. p. 63. 1859. Phillips, Professor J.—Sections of the Strata near Oxford. Journ. Geol. Soc., vol. xvi., pp. 115, 307. 1861. Whittaker W.—On the Chalk in Oxfordshire. Journ. Geol. Soc., vol. xvii. p. 166. 1871. Phillips, Professor J.—Geology of Oxford and the Thames Valley, 21s.

THE ROCKS of this county have been well studied, both by those men who laid the foundations of science and geology in the first half of the present century; and by their successors of to-day. Professor Buckland, who was rector of Islip (where he is buried) and Professor of Geology in Oxford University, wrote several papers on the subject. With him may be named Fitton, Strickland, and Ogilvy. The late Professor J. Phillips, of Oxford, gave us a capital work in his "Geology of Oxford and the Thames Valley." The Government geological maps of the county were published between 1859 and 1863, the work having been chiefly done by Messrs. Hull and Whittaker, and descriptive memoirs by these gentlemen and by Mr. Green have since been issued. Large collections of fossils were made by Mr. Whiteaves, and Professor Owen has frequently described the huge reptiles whose bones are not uncommon in the oolitic strata. The scenery of the central portion of Oxfordshire, where clays predominate, is somewhat dull and flat, but in the north-west, and in the chalk ridge which occupies the south-east corner, we get some respectable elevations.

The oldest rocks are found in the extreme north-west, and as we walk thence towards the chalk, we are continually passing over newer and newer beds which lie one upon the other, all having a general slant or dip towards the south-east. If on the contrary we walk towards the north-east or south-west, we can often manage to keep on one bed of rock all the way, because the different formations extend or strike in long irregular lines in that direction.

By a deep boring made near Burford, the interesting fact was ascertained that Coal-measures underlie Oxfordshire, at a depth, in this spot, of 1,184 ½ feet; the cores brought up were full of fossil ferns.

THE LIAS.—Commencing in the north-west we find the eastern portion of the Vale of Moreton to be composed of bluish clays—the Lower Lias—which also reach along the valley of the Cherwell as far as Steeple Aston, and along either side of the river Evenlode to near Charlbury; these Lower Lias clays contain a bed of hard shelly limestone called Banbury Marble, which takes a fair polish, and is worked into chimney-pieces &c.

The Middle Lias or Marlstone forms a prominent ridge overlooking this flat country, and ascending it we find ourselves on a plateau of the rock, which is a sandy limestone tinged red by oxide of iron, extending for 5 or 6 miles north-west and south of Banbury: this hard top band is termed the Rock-bed. The fossils found in the beds beneath, which are usually sandy clays 40 or 50 feet thick, show that they belong to the Marlstone, but from want of sections it is almost impossible to separate them from the great mass of Lower Lias clays beneath. The Rock-bed is largely worked for building and for road-metal; when dug at any depth, or under a covering of clay, it is a hard bluish limestone; where it has been much exposed to atmospheric influences, it has weathered brown, and has become comparatively friable. In this state it yields brown hematite—a valuable iron ore which has been largely worked at Adderbury, north of Deddington: here 36,808 tons were dug in 1874, valued at £7,721; but in 1879 only 1,233 tons, valued at £216, were obtained. At Fawler, Swalcliffe, and several other points the ore is of good quality, and will doubtless be worked at a future day. From Burford to Charlbury the thickness of the Rock bed varies from 10 to 20 feet. Fossils are common, such shells as Rhynchonella and Terebratula forming masses called "jacks" by the workmen.

Upper Lias Clays.—These are bluish clays which once everywhere covered up the Marlstone; they have been so denuded, however, as now only to exist in narrow strips, and in detached patches called outliers. As we follow them along a narrow strip on each side of the valley of the Evenlode they become thinner and thinner, until between Charlbury and Stonesfield they entirely disappear. It results from this that a boring, say near Oxford, might possibly reach coal at a depth of less than 2,00 feet. In sections near Banbury the beds are very fossiliferous, containing numerous Ammonites, &c. This district has been well worked by Messrs. T. Beesley and E. A. Walford

THE OOLITE.—In North Oxfordshire we find, resting upon the Upper Lias Clays, some sandy beds, here changing into a white oolitic freestone, as at Brailes Hill, or into ironstone, as at Mine Hill. Shenlow Hill, which rises to a height of 836 feet, is capped with these sands, as is also Epwell Hill, a little south of it. South of these points the sands spread out considerably, covering the Rollwright Ridge, and extending southwards to Chipping Norton, and eastwards to Dunstew and Steeple Aston. The term Northampton Sand has been applied to these beds, but it is very important to understand that here they really include two formations, the lower part containing marine shells and belonging to the Inferior Oolite, and the upper portion almost destitute of fossils, except wood and plant markings, being of Great Oolite age. In fact in North Northamptonshire and Lincolnshire we have a thick bed of limestone between these two sandy beds which have here run together, and are almost undistinguishable. Ammonites Murchisonæ is a very characteristic fossil of the lower division.

Great or Bath Oolite.—At the base of this well-known series occurs the "Stonesfield Slate," which is a laminated sandstone, splitting readily along the bedding planes into slabs thin enough to be used for roofing. The working of the slate is very expensive, and they are now only used for architectural effect. They have produced a large number of fossils, indicating their formation in shallow water. Trigonia impressa is the commonest shell, but the most remarkable fossils are the lower jaws of four small species of mammals, which are the oldest known except those in the Upper Trias. In similar beds at Sarsden, the Earl of Ducie obtained the lower jaw of a pterodactyle—an extinct species of flying reptile. Many sections of beds belonging to the lower part of the Great Oolite are exposed on both sides of the valleys of the Evenlode and the Dorne. At Taynton, near Burford, these beds have been extensively quarried, and the oldest buildings in Oxford are of stone obtained from this spot, which also furnished the material for Blenheim Palace, and for the inside of St. Paul's Cathedral.

The upper part of the Great Oolite is in Oxfordshire a thick-bedded white limestone, compact or marly, and about 20 or 30 feet in thickness. Entering the county near Westwell it passes by Burford and Wychwood Forest and spreads out into a flat plateau on which stand Ditchley Park, Kiddington, Wootton, &c. Crossing into Cherwell the outcrop is narrowed by that stream; good sections are exposed in the quarries at Enslow Bridge, where bones of saurians, especially Teleosaurus, are not uncommon; thence it passes northwards by Stoke Lyne, Cottisford, and Mixbury. The total thickness of the Great Oolite beds in this District is about 200 feet. Fossils are numerous, about 150 species being recorded, thick beds of the shell known as Terebratula maxillata being frequently exposed in quarries, as at Enslow Bridge.

Forest Marble.—This term is applied to the hard flaggy limestones, much ripple-marked and false-bedded, which compose the larger portion of Wychwood Forest. They are quarried for wall building and flags, and are often composed of broken oyster shells cemented together by carbonate of lime. This formation is very fragmentary and occupies more ground as outliers than along the outcrop; in the forest it is 25 feet thick. In the large outlier at Blenheim Park it has become reduced to 15 feet, and then south of Tackley seems to die out altogether. It again appears, however, on the left bank of the Cherwell, opposite Enslow Bridge: here it is clayey and is worked for brick-making. At Middleton Stoney and Bucknell the Forest Marble can also be recognised, but then thins away rapidly; it forms a poor soil.

Corubrash.—This is a rubbly cream-coloured or brown band of limestone about 10 or 15 feet thick, which is as constant in its occurrence as the Forest Marble is inconstant. From the village of Broughton Poggs in the south-west we can trace it by Broadwell and Kencott to Norton Bridge, where there are good sections. Passing round Witney the outcrop narrows from above a mile to about 200 yards or so. At Bladon it broadens out to Woodstock and Shipton; hereabouts the Cornbrash is very fossiliferous. From Middleton Stoney to Bicester this limestone forms a broad plateau more than two miles wide, and then from Fringford and Coddington it circles round to Buckingham: it forms a "brashy" loose soil of a reddish-brown hue, and well adapted for the growth of wheat. A curious row of inliers occur at Islip, Charlton, and Blackthorn Hill; these are dome-shaped masses, rising out of the dull plain of Oxford Clay, and it is worth noticing how they have all been seized upon as sites for villages. Avicula echinata is a common fossil.

The Oxford Clay.—The clunch, as William Smith called it, is a very thick blue clay which weathers yellow at the surface, and covers a broad tract of country, the scenery of which is remarkably dull and uninteresting. Entering near Lechlade it forms all the district between Bampton, Ducklington, Church Handborough and Bletchington on the north, and the Thames on the south. Then extending from Kidlington to Oxford we can follow it due north-east over the dreary ground of Ot Moor, past Launton and Piddington. There are some outliers on Wychwood Forest and one at Combe: at Oxford it is 600 feet thick. Sections are rare and fossils scarce. Near Bicester it is dug for bricks. Gryphæa dilatata is a characteristic fossil. Everywhere the Oxford Clay forms a cold stiff land, difficult to cultivate and usually in pasture.

Coral Rag.—The term "rag" is applied by workmen to any stone which is largely composed of shells, corals &c., bound together by a calcareo-siliceous or other cement. We can trace such beds from Sandford-on-the-Thames passing east of Cowley to Headington, Elsfield, Stanton St. John, and thence to Wheatley; from this point the sands and limestone die out and appear to be replaced by beds of clay. At Headington Hill, near Oxford, there are large quarries in this Coralline Oolite, and the stone has been much used in that city; it is not very durable, however, and requires to be laid as in the quarry, so that the bedding planes are not exposed; Wadham College is perhaps the best example of a building constructed of this stone. The lower division, or Calcareous Grit, is about 70 feet thick, and the upper part, or Coral Rag proper, about 50 feet; the latter is largely formed of corals, Thecosmilia and Isastrea being very numerous.

Kimmeridge Clay.—This is a very stiff unctuous shaly clay, with occasional bands of limestone nodules. It is well seen in the brick-pits near Headington, and its thickness in Oxfordshire is about 100 feet; it forms the vales of pasture land between Sandford, Toot Baldon, Cuddesdon, and Waterperry. Crystals of selenite, called "fossil water" by the workmen, are of frequent occurrence. Ostrea deltoidea is very common. At Cumnor Hurst, near Oxford, the bones of a large extinct species of reptile, called the Iguanodon, were found in 1879 in a sandy layer near the top of the Kimmeridge clay.

Portland Stone and Sand.—The lower part is formed of brownish sands which contain masses of grit of strange forms, such as those seen on the old London road in going from Oxford up Shotover Hill. These beds make no great show in Oxfordshire, although they are from 50 to 90 feet thick, being frequently concealed by the overlap of the Cretaceous series. The Portland stone is a white limestone, which is worked at Garsington. At Haseley the stone is about 8 feet thick. Similar beds occur at Cuddesden, Great and Little Milton, and east of Thame.

Purbeck Beds, 4 feet thick, are said to occur on Shotover Hill.

THE CRETACEOUS FORMATION.—Of the Lower Greensand a considerable patch extends from Culham to Burcott, and thence north to Nuneham Courtenay and east to Chiselhampton; it is here covered by the overlap of the Gault, but reappears at Great Haseley and Albury. Outliers cap Shotover Hill. These beds are variegated sands containing much siliceous iron ore towards the top and about 80 feet thick. Freshwater shells, as Unio and Paludina, occur here.

The Gault is a pale blue clay about 200 feet thick. We can trace it as a level tract on the left bank of the Thames at Dorchester and Warborough, and past Studhampton, Chalgrove, Rycote, Tetsworth, and Sydenham, the outcrop being from 1½ to 4 miles wide; it is dug for brick and tile making.

Upper Greensand.—This overlies the Gault, and forms a band about a mile wide from Crowmarsh and Bensington to Cuxham, South Weston, Chinnor and Henton; the lower part is whitish with dark clayey greensand above.

The Chalk.—The junction of the Lower Chalk with the Greensand is well marked by a line of springs, which have determined the sites of numerous villages, as Mongewell, Pyrton, Shirburn, Lewknor, Aston Rowant, Crowel, Chinnor, and Bledlow. The Lower Chalk is a white earthy limestone, almost destitute of flints: the Chalk Rock is the term applied to a hard band at the top which constitutes the crest of the Chiltern Hills. Beyond this, to the east, as far as the county extends, we have the Upper Chalk with flints. There are some good sections near Great Marlow.

TERTIARY PERIOD.—A few outlying fragments of EOCENE age are found scattered over the chalk downs, proving that they once covered them all over. At Binfield Heath and Emmir Green the vestiges of the Reading Beds cover more than a square mile, and in the latter place a little London Clay is to be seen in the brickyard. Similar outliers are found on Turville Common, Maidengrove Common, Nettlebed, Woodcot Common &c. These are mostly sandy, but at Nettlebed there is about 40 feet of greenish-white sandy clay, very valuable for making drain-pipes &c.

THE DRIFT.—The south-west of Oxfordshire is tolerably free from those surface masses of clay and sand, which interfere greatly in the northern and eastern divisions with the work of the geological surveyor. In gravel-pits we see that the drift, as it is termed, is mainly composed of fragments of Liassic and Oolitic rocks, broken up and mixed together, probably by the action of glaciers or floating icebergs. Through this debris, which partly filled up the ancient valleys, the present rivers have often cut their way, and the present river-gravels are usually composed of re-assorted drift pebbles.

Alluvial Deposits.—The rivers have also deposited much mud, or alluvium, on either side of their banks, forming the rich green water-meadows of the Thames and the Cherwell. These river accumulations are from a mile to a mile and a half broad in the neighbourhood of Oxford. The Windrush has also formed similar beds, averaging three-quarters of a mile wide, from Witney to its junction with the Isis.

PREHISTORIC MAN.—Implements fashioned out of stone are not of unfrequent occurrence; they are met with in the surface soil or in ancient interments or encampments. Flint arrow-heads have been found at Stanlake, Abingdon, and by Colonel Lane Fox in an old earthwork on Callow Hill. A stone celt or axe-head found at Eynsham is in the collection of Mr. John Evans; he describes it as a short thick specimen, 4½ inches long, which is also the length of a similar specimen from Abingdon; they are both polished, and the latter has a facet on the edge, having been reground to sharpen it. Another, made of greenstone, is recorded from Stanlake. A celt is said to have been found with some Roman remains at Alchester, but the association was probably accidental. These stone axes or adzes, or chisels, seem to have been set in sockets, which, however, are rarely met with. One such socket or handle formed of the horns of the red deer is said to have been found with human remains and pottery of an early character at Cockshott Hill, in Wychwood Forest. A hammer-stone formed of a quartzite pebble was obtained by Colonel Lane Fox within an ancient earthwork at Dorchester, and a sharpening or grinding stone was found at Burcott in the same parish in 1835, together with a stone celt. Flint flakes or knives are abundant on Callow Hill, and one, of which the edges were serrated, so as to act as a saw, was found at Brighthampton. From Callow Hill a flint scraper for dressing hides is also to be mentioned, and a fragment of a spear-head from Dorchester Dykes. A diligent look-out would lead to many more discoveries of these old stone tools, which are the only remaining traces of savage tribes who inhabited this country in pre-historic times.

W. J. H.

The following table shows the acreage under each kind of crop, and the number of horses, cattle, sheep, and pigs in Oxfordshire, as taken from the Agricultural returns, 1882:—

CROPS.	ACRES.	LIVE STOCK.	NUMBER.
Corn and Cereals	157,786	Horses for agriculture, brood mares and unbroken horses	17,399
Roots, artificial grasses, cabbage, kohl-rabbi and rape	52,549	Cows in milk or calf	17,353

ADDERBURY, a parish which includes the townships of EAST and WEST ADDERBURY, the chapelries of MILTON and BARFORD ST. JOHN, is in Bloxham hundred, Banbury union and county court district, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The Oxford canal passes the parish on the east; the parish is separated from Northamptonshire on the east by the Cherwell. The area of the parish is 6,380 acres; rateable value £11,881; population in 1881 was 1,423.

East Adderbury is situated on the Sorbrook, a tributary of the River Cherwell, 3½ miles south-by-east from Banbury and 17½ north from Oxford, 3 miles from the Aynho station on the Great Western railway and on the road from Oxford to Banbury. The Banbury and Cheltenham direct railway, which is constructed but not yet opened, passes through this parish and will have a station here. The church of St. Mary, which stands on elevated ground, is an edifice of various dates and consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles and a western tower with a spire, containing 8 bells and a clock; the stained east window was erected by a bequest of the Rev. Charles Alcock, a former vicar; the chancel, a work of the Perpendicular period, was built by William of Wykeham, who, in 1385, gave this vicarage to New College, Oxford, of which he was the founder; his bust, with armorial bearings, is carved on the external wall over the east window as well as on the woodwork of the roof; on the north side of the chancel is an original vestry, with a room over it, and an oriel window; the nave has a fine timber roof and Decorated stone porches; there is a brass of a man in armour, wearing a collar, and his wife c. 1460; another to Jane, wife of George Smythe, 1508, and an inscription on brass to Roger Wells, merchant, and his wives Joan and Agnes; in the chancel is buried Sir George Cobb bart. the last lineal representative of an ancient family once resident here, he died in 1762; and there is here also a monument to Dr. Oldys, shot by soldiers of the Parliamentary army during the Civil war; in the churchyard is a monument to Dr. William Beaw, Bishop of Llandaff, 1679-1706, and formerly vicar of Adderbury: the chancel was restored in 1834, under the direction of Mr. Buckler. The register dates from the year 1598. The living is a vicarage with the chapelries of Barford, St. John and Milton annexed, joint net yearly value £522 with residence, in the gift of New College, Oxford, and held since 1874 by the Rev. Henry John Gepp M.A. late fellow of that college. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. By a scheme established in the year 1871 by the Charity Commissioners for the regulation of the Feoffees' or Town Lands Charity belonging to East and West Adderbury and Milton, which produces about £350 a year, the apportionment is as follows: —one fifth to church; one-fifth to education; one-fifth to hospital or infirmary or sick clubs; one fifth to local friendly institutions; and one-fifth to the poor. Henry Wilmot esq. was created Lord Wilmot of Adderbury by King Charles I. in 1644, and Earl of Rochester by Charles II. in 1652; he was the father of Henry Wilmot, the witty but profligate earl of Rochester, ranger of Woodstock park, where he died July 26, 1680. On the estates of William Chamberlin esq. and Mr. Edward Railton are iron stone quarries, worked by the Adderbury Iron Stone Company, whose offices are in Birmingham. Cotefield is the residence of Timothy Edward Cobb esq. J.P. The old manor house was built by one of the Bustard family, with whom Sir Thomas Pope was connected by marriage. G. Bliss esq. is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are New College, Oxford, W. Chamberlain esq. and T. P. Golby esq. The soil is red loam; subsoil, clay and rock. The crops are wheat, barley, oats, beans, swedes and potatoes. The area is 1,988 acres; rateable value £5,895; the population in 1881 of East Adderbury was 909.

Milton hamlet is one mile west from East Adderbury. A church or chapel of ease with a small tower containing 2 bells was erected here in 1856 to hold about 100 persons; service is performed on Sundays by the clergy of Adderbury. The area is 770A. OR. 9P.; rateable value £1,751; the population in 1881 was 131. Letters through Banbury. WALL LETTER BOX cleared at 3.40 p.m. East Adderbury & Bloxham are the nearest money order & telegraph offices.

West Adderbury township is separated from East Adderbury by the Sorbrook. Here is a Congregational chapel and a Meeting House for the Society of Friends. The principal landowners are H. C. Risley, William Chamberlin and Thomas Perry esqs. The area is 1,120A. OR. 32P.; rateable value £2,926; the population in 1881 was 313. WALL LETTER BOX, West Adderbury, cleared at 7.15 p.m. daily. The nearest money order & telegraph office is at East Adderbury.

Barford St. John chapelry is 5 miles south-west from Banbury and 2 north-west from Deddington, situate on the river Swere, a tributary of the Cherwell. The church of St. John, a chapel of ease to Adderbury, is a small plain edifice of mixed styles, with an octagonal turret containing 2 bells; it has a Norman doorway with zigzag moulding and an Early Norman font; some windows are Decorated; the church was restored in 1864. The Rev. Philip Hookins B.A. of Trinity Hall, Cambridge and vicar of Barford St. Michael, is the officiating curate. The principal landowners are Sir Henry W. Dashwood bart. and Francis Sellers esq. The area is 480 acres; rateable value £1,309; the population in 1881 was 80.

ALVESCOT is a parish and village with a station on the Oxford, Witney and Fairford railway, 3 miles north-west from Bampton, 8½ from Witney and 75 from London, in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, on a brook which runs through Bourton and Bampton into the Thames. The church (dedication uncertain) is an ancient structure of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, nave, north and south transepts, two chapels and low western embattled tower of Perpendicular date, containing 5 bells: the chancel is modern: the north chapel Decorated; the south chapel Perpendicular, with an original boarded ceiling, painted and gilt; the font is Early English: the church was thoroughly restored in 1873. The register dates from the year 1663. The living is a rectory, net yearly value about £350 with residence, in the gift of and held since 1878 by the Rev. Walter Neate B.A. of New College, Oxford. Here are Particular Baptist, Congregational and Primitive Methodist chapels. The several charities for distribution in clothing, bread and fuel, represent a yearly value of £20 10s. besides £2 for the repair of monuments left by Rebecca, wife of Goddard Carter esq. who, in 1725, left £5 to apprentice poor children besides his bequest to the school. Jane Bray, of Great Barrington, in 1715, left £1 annually to be laid out at Christmas by the lord of the manor, minister and overseers of the poor for the time being, to buy garments for poor people who have never received parochial relief. Thomasine Mills and Mrs. Mary Kirby in 1784, jointly left £50 stock in the £3 per Cent. Consols, the interest to be given away yearly in bread the Sunday before Christmas. Catherine Winkworth's charity of £100 is invested in the £3 per Cent. Consols, and the interest of which is applied to the repair of her tomb and the churchyard, the surplus, if any, to be distributed amongst the widows and widowers of the parish. The poor's allotment of 9 acres produces £18 yearly for fuel. The trustees of the late Rev. A. Neate are lords of the manor. The principal landowners are the trustees of the late Rev. A. Neate, Messrs. F. Butler, J. Nalder and J. Hill. The soil is stone brash and gravel; subsoil, the same. The chief crops are the usual cereals and roots. The area is 2,690 acres; rateable value, £2,783; the population in 1881 was 362.

AMBROSDEN is a large parish extending over a considerable tract of country, 3 miles south-east from Bicester and 12 north-east from Oxford, in the hundred of Bullingdon, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The name is supposed to be derived from Ambrosius Aurelius, who encamped here during the siege of Alcester by the Saxons. A feeder of the Ray flows through. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is an ancient structure chiefly in the Early Decorated style and supposed to have been built in the reign of Edward II.: it consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, south aisle with porch, and an embattled western tower containing a clock and 6 fine-toned bells: the chancel is Perpendicular and retains a piscina: the nave is divided from its aisle by an arcade of four Decorated arches on octagonal columns; the exterior wall of the aisle is finished with a good open trefoiled parapet, and a cornice of beads and ball flowers, both continued round the porch; the rood-loft stairs remain and there is a Norman doorway on the north side: the tower is late Early English: in the chancel is a memorial to John Stabbing D.D. vicar, 1635-55, who, in 1638, built the vicarage house, at a cost of £800: this stone was placed to his memory by Dr. White Kennett, who succeeded to the vicarage in 1685: in the churchyard are the remains of a cross, on an octagonal base: the church has been completely restored from funds derived from an ancient bequest by an unknown donor, of 25 acres of land, producing £70 yearly: it has been re-seated with open benches, and the chancel restored by the lay rector and subscriptions, the whole cost amounting to £1,500, under the direction of Charles N. Beazley esq. architect, of London. The churchyard has been enlarged with ground given by the late Sir Edward Page Turner. The register dates from the year 1611. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £300 with residence, in the gift of the trustees of the late Sir E. H. Page Turner and held since 1866 by the Rev. Charles Edward Bagshawe, of St. Aidans. Dr. White Kennett, vicar here 1685-1721, afterwards became Dean of Peterborough, and in 1718 was made Bishop of that See, which he held till 1728; his "Parochial Antiquities" are well known. Ambrosden Park was formerly of great magnitude and extent and contained a noble mansion, erected by Sir William Glynne, first baronet of that name, towards the end of the seventeenth century; few traces of it now remain; in 1728 it was purchased by Edward Turner esq. and for some time continued to be the seat of that family. The trustees of the late Sir Edward Henry Page Turner bart. are lords of the manor and principal landowners. The soil is stone brash and clay; subsoil, clay and stone. The chief crops are wheat, beans and barley. The area of the entire parish is 4,863 acres; rateable value £5,292; Ambrosden, exclusive of hamlets, £903; the population in 1881 of the entire parish was 717; Ambrosden, exclusive of hamlets, 160.

POST OFFICE.—Mrs. Elizabeth Sarah Taylor, receiver. Letters arrive through Bicester at 8 a.m. & dispatched 3.40 p.m. The nearest money order & telegraph office is at Bicester

Arncott Upper and Lower, or Over and Nether, form a hamlet to Ambrosden, situated a mile and a half south of that place, near the Bucks border. Here is a small Wesleyan chapel. ARDLEY is a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, Bicester union and county court district, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situated on the road from Oxford to Brackley, 7 miles south from the latter, 5 north-west from Bicester and 3 miles west from Somerton station on the Great Western railway. The church of St. Mary consists of chancel and nave, and a western tower of the Decorated period, with a saddle-back roof: the chancel is of the same date, but the nave was rebuilt in a very inferior style about the year 1789; the chancel has five windows, including the east window of three lights, the tracery of three of which is very good; in the north wall is a sepulchral arch, with shields of arms: the church has been restored and beautified and the body of the church re-seated at considerable expense by Mrs. Anne Hind, daughter of the Rev. Thomas Hind M.A. a former rector. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1759, burials from 1761, marriages from April 1758. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £285 with residence and 55 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Duke of Marlborough and held since 1873 by the Rev. George Sandham Griffith M.A. of Clare College, Cambridge. In the parish is the foundation of a castle, supposed to have been built in the reign of King Stephen. The Duke of Marlborough is lord of the manor; Major-Gen. Sir Thomas Peyton bart. the Rev. Thomas Lowe and the rector are the principal landed proprietors. The land about here is poor and principally limestone; subsoil, stone brash. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The area is 1,469 acres; rateable value, £1,708; the population in 1881 was 161.

ASCOTT, or ASCOTT-UNDER-WYCHWOOD, is a parish and station on the Great Western railway, pleasantly situated about 7 miles north-west from Witney and 6 south from Chipping Norton, in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford; the river Evenlode flows through. Shipton station on the Great Western railway is in this parish, 1¼ miles west of the village. The church of Holy Trinity is an ancient edifice in the Norman and later styles, consisting of a chancel, clerestoried nave, north aisle, south chapel, south porch and a western tower of the Transition period containing 5 bells: the chancel walls are Norman, but the east window of three lights is an insertion of the Decorated period: two small Norman windows remain on the north side, and on the south, piscina and sedilia: the chancel arch is Decorated, but rude: the nave and north aisle are divided by an arcade of three semicircular Norman arches, supported on massive pillars, but two of these have been recently disfigured by being made square: the south porch has a curious Norman inner doorway and quaint corbels support its roof: the font is Perpendicular; there are a few good oak benches with poppy-heads of the fleur-de-lis form. The register dates from the year 1569. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £80, with residence and 13 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1876 by the Rev. Samuel York M.A. of Brasenose College. The Baptists have a small chapel here. The poor's estate of 4A. OR. 12P. with 21 cottages produces about £72 yearly, £20 of which is allotted to the school, the net remainder being distributed in fuel and clothing; it was formerly wholly expended in apprenticing, and clothing girls going out to service. Lord Churchill is lord of the manor and owns all the land with the exception of one farm of about 500 acres, the property of the Crown. A court leet is held at the "Churchill Arms" annually on Easter Tuesday. The soil is clay and stone brash; subsoil, clay and rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans, oats and turnips. The area is 1,793 acres; rateable value, £3,592; the population in 1881 was 401.

ASTHALL is a village and parish on the river Windrush, 3 miles east-by-south from Burford, about 4½ west from Witney and 5 north from Bampton railway station on the Oxford, Witney and Fairford railway, in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Nicholas is an ancient building, in the Early English and later styles, consisting of chancel with north chapel, nave, north aisle, north porch, and a western embattled tower containing 3 bells: the chancel, with sedilia and piscina, is Early English, but has an inserted window of Perpendicular date on the south side: in the chapel, under a Decorated window containing portions of ancient stained glass, is a large recess of rich Perpendicular work containing a recumbent female effigy, mutilated: a window of the latter style at the east end also contains fragments of similar glass, and near it is an altar drain and locker: a parclose within a Transition arch, with Norman beak-head mouldings, divides this chapel from the aisle; and an arcade of three arches on Norman piers separates the aisle from the nave, the windows of which furnish examples of every style except the Norman. In the churchyard is an ancient altar tomb, panelled with quatrefoils and shields. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1704; marriages, 1719; burials, 1764. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £150 with residence, in the gift of Eton College and held since 1883 by the Rev. John Henry Kirwan Ward M.A. Trinity College, Cambridge. The charities for distribution in bread and money are £14 yearly, of which £6 13s. 4d. is for widows, and there are also £5 for church purposes. Asthall barrow is a considerable tumulus on the Akeman Street, a Roman road which formerly crossed the river near Asthall Bridge. The old Manor house stands near the church and is now occupied as a farmhouse. The principal landowners are the Earl of Redesdale, who is lord of the manor, Arthur Bateman esq. Eton College and Queen's College, Oxford. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, gravel and rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. The area is 1,180 acres; rateable value, £2,021; the population in 1881 (including the hamlet), was 374.

ASTON, see BAMPTON ASTON.

NORTH ASTON is a parish and village, 2 miles south from Deddington, 8 north-east from Woodstock and 1 west from Somerton station, on the Oxford and Birmingham railway, on the main road to Oxford and Banbury, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Woodstock, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford; the river Cherwell and Oxford canal pass on the east. The church of St. Mary, an ancient building of mixed styles, chiefly Decorated, was restored in 1866-7; it consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, south porch and a western Perpendicular tower containing 4 bells: there is a pulpit of very fine oak, with the arms of Howard, given by Lady Howard about 1720, and some open oak benches; the font is of Charles II. time; under an arch on the south side of the chancel is an altar tomb of alabaster, with recumbent figures of a knight and lady, to John Anne and Alice his wife, 1416; and there are other memorials to Basill Brooke, of Madeley, Salop, 1700, and to Bernard Gates, choir master of the Chapels Royal and of Westminster Abbey, 1778, erected by his pupil Dupuis, the organist and composer. The register dates regularly from the year 1598, but there are transcripts from 1565. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £300 with residence, in the gift of William M. Foster-Melliar esq. and held since 1848 by the Rev. Charles Rede Clifton M.A. of Merton College, Oxford. North Aston Hall, the seat of William Melliar Foster-Melliar esq. J.P. who is lord of the manor, is a commodious residence surrounded by an extensive and well-wooded park. The principal landowners are W. M. Foster-Melliar esq. and the vicar of Rousham. The soil is mixed clay and stone brash and sand; subsoil the same. The land is half arable and half pasture. The area is 1,272 acres; rateable value, £2,834; the population in 1881 was 225.

ASTON ROWANT is a parish and village, and station on the Watlington and Princes Risborough railway, 6 miles south from Thame, 39 by road from London and 3½ north-east from Watlington, in the hundred of Lewknor, union and county court district of Thame, rural deanery of Aston and diocese and archdeaconry of Oxford. The church of SS. Peter and Paul, repaired in 1850, is an edifice of the Early English and Decorated periods, and consists of chancel, nave, two small chapels on its north and south sides, and a western embattled tower, with a pinnacle at each of the four angles, and containing a fine peal of 5 bells, three of which date from 1625; the fifth being inscribed "Benedicta sit Trinitas," and the sixth dated 1737: the chancel is Decorated, and has a plain arch with a hagioscope on either side: there is an ancient and elegant font of Early English date, supported on a pedestal encircled with eight detached shafts; in the south porch there remains a Decorated stoup: a new organ was erected in the year 1874; during the repairs an ancient stone monument was discovered in the north aisle to Lady Cecil Hobbee, the wife of Sir Edward Hobbee; she was the daughter of Sir Edward Unton K.B. and Anne Countess of Warwick, daughter of the Duke of Somerset, whose tomb remains in the Unton chapel, in Faringdon church; at the entrance to the chancel are the remains of a large brass to Sir Hugh-le-Blonnt, supposed to be the founder of the church, with the following inscription in Norman French: "You who pass by pray for the soul of Sir Hugh-le-Blount, the body of whom lies here, may Jesus Christ receive his soul;" there is also a brass to Ralph Compoite, 1437, and his wife Isabella, 1441; and another with male and female figures, and those of 5 children, c. 1470. The register dates from the year 1554, and contains entries relating to Stoken-church parish from that date to 1706. The living is a vicarage, yearly value £190 with residence and 64 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford, and held since 1878 by the Rev. Henry Savill Young M.A. of Brasennose College, Oxford. The charities for distribution in clothing and money amount to about £50 yearly, the chief of which is the James charity of £40; the church lands prodnce £4 a year. Aston House, the seat of Thomas Taylor esq. J.P. is situated in a park of 160 acres, and is surrounded by extensive shrubberies and gardens, with a lake in front of the mansion, which has been much enlarged by the present owner, and a picture gallery added. Thomas Taylor esq. J.P. who is lord of the manor, A. H. C. Brown esq. D.L., J.P. and W. H. Newman esq. are the principal landowners. The parish is situated on the débris of the chalk and greensand. The chief crops are beans, wheat, barley, oats and roots. The area is 2,520 acres; rateable value, £4,350: the population in 1881 was 832.

Chalford is a township and hamlet 1 mile north. The poor's land and allotments here produce about £3 a year for distribution in money; and there is a sum of £1 4s. from church lands in the hamlet.

Kingston Blount hamlet is one mile east. St. John's church, a chapel of ease to the mother church, consecrated May 4th, 1877, is a building of red brick, consisting of chancel and nave, and a bell-cot containing one bell: at the east end is a three-light stained window, representing in the centre light The Crucifixion, with figures of the Blessed Virgin and St. John on either side; at the west end is a stained lancet window, with a figure of St. Augnstine; and below an inscription on brass to Alexander Penrose Forbes, late Bishop of Brechin, who died in 1875. Here are Congregational and Primitive Methodist chapels. Kingston House, the seat of Arthur Henry Clerke Brown esq. D.L., J.P. is a commodious mansion, situated in extensive pleasure grounds, at the base of the Chiltern Hills. Kingston Grove stands about a mile from the village, and immediately at the foot of the Chiltern Hills; the scenery around is very picturesque. A. H. Clerke Brown esq. D.L., J.P. is lord of the manor.

STEEPLE ASTON is a parish and a very pleasant village, 6½ miles north-by-east from Woodstock, 1¼ north-west from the Heyford station, on the Oxford and Birmingham (Great Western) railway, 13 north from Oxford and 4 south from Deddington, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Woodstock, rural deanery of Woodstock, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The river Cherwell and Oxford canal pass on the east. The church of St. Peter is a structure of mixed styles, its earliest portions being Early English: it consists of chancel, north chantry chapel, nave, aisles, south porch, and western embattled tower of Perpendicular date, containing 6 bells, dating from 1675 to 1827, and a sanctus bell, dated 1867, together with a clock; the chancel is debased Perpendicular, and has an east window of three lights, with two transoms and a restored screen; the north chapel retains a fine Decorated east window and a piscina of this date; on its north side is a splendid monument by Schumaker to Sir Francis Page, baron of the Exchequer 1741, and Lady Page, 1730; the former, who was notorious for his arbitrary conduct to prisoners, is satirised by Pope; the nave is Early English and has arcades of three arches; the north aisle Perpendicular, rebuilt about 1846 and the south aisle Decorated, as are the south door and porch; the benches are all of carved oak of late Perpendicular work and were restored in 1842; the font is round, but its age is disputed, some assigning it to the twelfth century: in the church is carefully preserved an ancient cope, 4ft. 3in. high and 5ft. 2in. long and richly embroidered with the martyrdoms of saints; it was for some time on view in the loan department at the South Kensington Museum: in the north aisle is a brass in good preservation, dated 1525; a stone reredos has been erected by the present rector and an organ was presented a few years ago by the late J. Lechmere esq. and others; in the chancel is buried Daniel Greenwood D.D. principal of Brasenose College from 1648, and his nephew of the same name, a former rector; the fabric of the church was restored in 1842. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1543; marriages, 1538; burials, 1598. The living is a rectory, net yearly value upwards of £500 with residence, in the gift of Brasenose College, Oxford, and held since 1863 by the Rev. John Henry Brookes M.A. late fellow of that college. There is a chapel belonging to the United Methodist Free Church. Two friendly societies are maintained here. North Aston, Middle Aston, and Steeple Aston have a joint subscription Fire Engine Society, established in 1831; the engine station is in this parish. Dr. Radcliffe's almshouse, founded in 1648, is for two almsfolk, usually women; the endowment is in the hands of the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford, and produces £4 per annum for each inmate. Charles Walter Upton-Cottrell-Dormer esq. who is lord of the manor, B. S. Ogle esq. J.P. Rev. J. H. Brookes M.A. Edward John Eyre esq. and the trustees of W. Wing esq. are the principal landowners. About 1622 a Roman tessellated pavement was discovered here; it consisted of oblong squares and these were set perpendicularly to the horizon. The soil and subsoil are chiefly oolitic stone brash, the meadows in the Cherwell valley being deep rich alluvial land; the arable land bears superior crops of barley, turnips and mangold wurtzel; the crops of wheat and oats do not reach the average of the county, but for sheep the land is esteemed suitable and very healthy. The area is 1,954 acres; rateable value, £3,174; the population in 1881 (including Middle Aston) was 776.

Middle Aston is a township of Steeple Aston, from which place it is distant one mile north and is composed of three farms and a few cottages. Charles Walter Upton-Cottrell-Dormer esq. is lord of the manor and sole landowner. The area is 891 acres; rateable value, £1,319; the population in 1881 was 94.

MARSH BALDON, anciently Baldendone and Baldington, is a parish in the hundred of Bullingdon, union and county court district of Abingdon, rural deanery of Cuddesdon, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 5½ miles south-east from Oxford and 3½ from the Littlemore station, on the Great Western Railway. The Roman Akeman Street passed both places of this name in proceeding from Shotover to Wallingford. The place takes its now perverted name from Peter de la Mere or Mare, who in the thirteenth century held land here and endowed the church. The church of St. Peter is an ancient edifice in the Decorated and Perpendicular styles, consisting of chancel, nave, north aisle and a Decorated western tower mantled with ivy and containing 4 bells: on the erection of the north aisle, the east window was removed thither and its place occupied by a painting of the Annunciation, presented in 1794 by Sir Christopher Willoughby bart.; the only other windows in the chancel are on the south side, one of which contains shields of arms of the families of Danvers and Pollard; the north aisle is a modern addition, with pillars and arches of wood and the removed window referred to is filled with fragments of old glass of different dates, including figures of St. Ann, the Virgin Mary and St. John and the shields of Giffard and de la Mare above; and below, those of Henry VIII. Pollard and Danvers: on the north side of the chancel are two monuments in a debased Gothic style, to friends and relatives of Sir Christopher Willoughby; and on the opposite side a monument with twisted columns and a long Latin inscription to Ann, wife of John Crawley D.D. 1701 and daughter of John Pollard and Susanna (Danvers), his wife: on the floor are two stone slabs, one of which, below the quartered coat of Danvers, has an inscription to John Danvers, of this place, ob. 1651; the other is inscribed to John Bridges D.D. Bishop of Oxford, 1603-18, with a shield of his arms impaling those of the see. The register dates from the year 1559. The living is a rectory, yearly value £236 with residence, in the gift of Sir John C. Willoughby bart. and held by the Rev. Edmond Walters M.A. of Hertford College, Oxford. The charities are about £20 yearly. Baldon House is an old but commodious brick mansion surrounded by a small park and is the seat of Sir John Charles Willoughby bart. In the park are some remains of the old church of Nuneham Courtney, consisting of part of a fine Early English window, a lancet window and a tomb, with effigies of Sir Anthony Pollard, 1577 and Philippa his wife, 1606. The principal landowner is Sir John C. Willoughby bart. who is lord of the manor. The soil is light sand; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, oats, barley and beans. The area is 570 acres; rateable value, £1,327; and the population in 1881 was 390.

TOOT BALDON, commonly called BALDON TOOT, is a parish 5 miles south-east from Oxford and 2¾ miles south-east from the Littlemore station, on the Great Western railway and equally distant from Culham and Wheatley on the same railway, in the hundred of Bullingdon, union and county court district of Abingdon, rural deanery of Cuddesdon, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The Baldon brook flows through the parish. The church of St. Laurence, situated on an eminence, is a small but ancient edifice in the Transition Norman and Early English styles and consists of chancel, nave and aisles under the same roof, south transept, south porch and a gable bell-cote at the west end, containing 2 bells: in the chancel are two small square lockers: the nave has arcades of four Early English arches on each side on massive piers, with boldly foliaged caps, the easternmost having a small trefoil-headed niche above the cap: the transept, or chapel, on the south side dates from the fourteenth century and has a Decorated window, with slight remains of stained glass; the doorway of the south porch is Transition Norman, the font is circular and of Early English date; the church retains a number of old floor tiles, but these are much worn: in the churchyard, on the south side, are the shaft and base of a Perpendicular cross and a yew tree of some age. The register dates from the year 1579. The living, formerly a peculiar of Dorchester Abbey, is a discharged vicarage, net yearly value £40 with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1871 by the Rev. James Coulman Ross M.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge. Wilmot's charity of £2 yearly is appropriated to the relief of the poor who are not in receipt of parochial aid: the poor's allotment of Marsh Baldon provides £8 yearly for the poor of this parish. The Provost and scholars of Queen's College, Oxford, are the lords of the manor; the above, with Sir John C. Willoughby bart. and Edward W. Harcourt esq. M.P. are the chief landed proprietors. The soil is variable and includes gravel, sand and clay; subsoil, Oxfordshire clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley and beans. The area is 2,010 acres; rateable value, £2,040; the population in 1881 was 217.

LITTLE BALDON is a hamlet, and the "GOLDEN BALL" 2½ miles.

BAMPTON is a township, parish, and formerly a market town 14 miles west from Oxford, 6 north from Farringdon, 5 south-west from Witney and 71 from London, in the Witney county court district and union, hundred of Bampton, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford; it is situated in an agricultural district, watered by the river Isis and several tributary streams, and depends greatly for its prosperity on the agricultural interests. By an Order in Council, dated December 30th, 1845, Bampton was divided into three ecclesiastical parishes, viz. Bampton (proper), Bampton Aston and Bampton Lew. The Oxford, Witney and Fairford (Great Western) railway has a station about 2 miles north of the town, which consists chiefly of 3 streets converging in a spacious market place. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is a fine and spacious cruciform building, chiefly of the Transition period, from Early English to Decorated, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, transepts, aisles, three chapels attached to the transepts, and a central tower with spire containing 6 bells and a clock with chimes playing three times a day: the walls of the chancel are Norman, and it retains sedilia and piscina of Early English date, and a very singular Easter sepulchre of Perpendicular work, there remain also some fine old carved stalls, with misereres and benches carved with various heraldic devices: the north transept has a chapel on its Eastern side, within which is a fine recumbent effigy, apparently of the date of Henry IV., but much mutilated, and embedded in the wall between this chapel and the chancel is a very fine reredos, of our Lord and the twelve apostles under rich canopies; the south transept has two chapels, one on either side: the Easternmost or Hoard chapel has been the burial place of the family of that name, formerly owners of Cote House, and contains an interesting monument, with effigies and verses, to George Thomson, 1603: at the end of this transept is a rich, late Norman doorway: the nave is separated from the aisles by arcades of massive character, supporting a Perpendicular clerestory: the roofs are open-timbered, of the same date: the tower, rising on Transition Norman arches, has four figures of angels at the angles, in place of pinnacles, and an octagonal spire rising to a height of 150 feet from the ground: there are brasses to Thomas Plymmyswode, vicar, c. 1429, in surplice and almice; Robert Holcot A.M. "venerabilis ac scientificus vir," vicar 1500, in cope; and Frances (Gardner), wife of Sir Thomas Hood, of Cote, 1633: in the churchyard, under the east window, is another recumbent effigy: it was restored in 1870 from plans prepared by Ewan Christian esq. the parish advancing £1,000 for the purpose; the chancel was completed at the expense of the late vicar and some friends, with assistance from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The register of baptisms and marriages dates from October 1538, burials from 1692, and from 1783 to 1812 includes entries relating to Shifford; there are also overseers' books from 1718, and from 1822. The living of Bampton (proper) is a vicarage, net yearly value £474 with residence and glebe let for £412, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter and held since 1872 by the Rev. Edward George Hunt M.A. of Exeter College, Oxford, and surrogate. The Grammar school, with residence for master, is an ancient building, founded in 1670 by Robert Veysey esq. of Chimney, who left £300 for the instruction of boys living in the parish and dependencies of Bampton, and the adjoining parish of Yelford; this endowment was afterwards augmented by a bequest of £100 under the will of John Palmer, dated October 23, 1650; the school is now endowed with about 8 acres of land, which produce about £20 yearly. Here are places of worship for Baptists and Particular Baptists. The charities for distribution in bread and clothing, fuel and money amount to about £106 yearly, and there are other charities of about £47 per annum for Church purposes and £7 10s. for apprenticing. The Deanery Farm, now in the occupation of Mr. C. Hobbs, is a picturesque Elizabethan house with gabled roofs and mullioned windows. Ham Court, situated a short distance to the west of the church and deanery, comprises a gateway and other unimportant remains of an ancient castellated house, built by Aylmer De Valence, Earl of Pembroke. The Town Hall is a plain rectangular building of stone in the centre of the town, gabled on all four sides, and forming on the ground floor an open arcaded market and engine house; it was erected about 1840, at a cost of £300. A large fair for horses is held on the 26th and 27th of August. The landowners are Christ Church and Jesus College, Oxon, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, the Duke of Marlborough and some smaller owners. The soil is gravel; subsoil, gravel. The area is 8,750 acres, principally arable; rateable value £8,424; the population of Bampton and Weald in 1881 was 1,395.

WEALD is a hamlet, but really forming a portion of the town; it has a blanket charity of about £9 yearly.

ASTON, BRIGHTAMPTON, CHIMNEY, COTE and SHIFFORD were formerly hamlets of the ancient parish of Bampton, but are now separated from Bampton (proper), and will be found under Bampton Aston ecclesiastical parish.

LEW is given under the heading of BAMPTON LEW.

BAMPTON ASTON is an ecclesiastical parish formed in 1845 from the civil parish of Bampton, embracing the hamlets of ASTON and COTE, and the chapelry of SHIFFORD with the hamlets of BRIGHTHAMPTON and CHIMNEY, in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. Aston is 2 miles east from Bampton, 4 south-east from Bampton station, and 4½ south from Witney station. The church of St. James is a cruciform structure in a modern Gothic style, erected in 1839 and consecrated in 1840, and consists of chancel, nave, transepts, and a tower with spire containing 1 bell; there are sittings for 500 persons: the font was given by the Rev. John Nelson, Sept. 2nd, 1839. The register dates from the year 1839. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £660 with residence, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, and held since 1857 by the Rev. Ralph Barnes M.A. of Christ Church, Oxford, who is also vicar of and resides at Ardington, Berks; the Rev. Samuel Montague Stable B.A. of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, has been curate in charge since 1880. Here is a small Baptist chapel. Here is a National school with house for the master attached. Horde's charity of £10 yearly, and Wilmot's of 13s. 4d. are for clothing and general relief. The clerk's lands of 4A. 4 R. 4 P. alloted in 1845 are occupied by the parish clerk. H. Hippisley esq. who is lord of the manor, Mr. W. White, the Rev. J. H. Usill and Capt. F. Williams are the chief landowners. The soil is suitable for the growth of barley and wheat; subsoil, clay and gravel. The population of the whole parish of Bampton Aston in 1881 was 883, and the area 4,938 acres; rateable value, £7,092.

Cote is half-a-mile east and consists of several farms and cottages. Here is an ancient Baptist chapel, first founded in this place in 1657, by a congregation from Longworth, and endowed with a house at Aston for the minister: there is a memorial in the chapel to Thomas Dunscombe M.A. 36 years pastor, 1811; it has registers of births dating from 1647, and of burials from 1657. Cote House is a late Elizabethan or Jacobean mansion, with a central gabled portion and two projecting wings of unequal height; it contains a massive oak staircase. The population in 1881 was with Aston 711; rateable value £4,654.

Parish Clerk, John Fox.
Deputy Parish Clerk, Laban Long.

Shifford, a very ancient place, on the Isis, 2¼ miles south-east, is a chapelry to which Brighthampton and Chimney paid church-rates, and was formerly a place of some importance; it is said by old historians that Alfred held a Witan here A.D. 890; it consists now of two farms and a few cottages. The church, erected in 1863 on the site of the old church, built in 1780 in place of an earlier structure which had fallen in 1772, is a small but handsome Gothic building, consisting of chancel and nave with a bell-turret containing 2 bells. The only available register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 783; marriages, 1786; the registers previous to this date are said to be so much damaged by damp as to be illegible; but there are entries of baptisms and burials relating to this place from 1783 to 1812, and of marriages from 1813 to 1835, in the registers of Bampton proper. Colonel E. W. Harcourt M.P. is lord of the manor and chief landowner. The soil is gravel and clay; subsoil, clay. The crops are the usual cereals. The population in 1881 was 70; rateable value, £1,000.

Brighthampton hamlet in 1881 had a population of 74, rateable value £877; it is 3 miles east from Aston. Weal's charity of £4 15s. is for distribution in money.

Chimney is 2 miles south-east, separated by the Isis from Berkshire, and consists of two farms and some cottages; it is the property of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The population in 1881 was 28; rateable value £561.

BANBURY.

Banbury (A. S. Baranbyrig) is a municipal and parliamentary borough, market and union town and polling place for the county, situated in a deep valley near the northern part of Oxfordshire, on the river Cherwell, which here divides this county from Northamptonshire, 77 miles by rail from London, 23 north from Oxford, 17 north-west from Buckingham, 28 from Northampton, 15 north from Bicester, 21 from Stratford-on-Avon, 98 from Bristol, 43 from Birmingham and 136 from Liverpool, in the hundred and union of its own name, rural deanery of Deddington, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The town consists of several good streets; it is well lighted with gas and is abundantly supplied with good water by a company recently formed, with a capital of about £14,000. Banbury is the terminus of the Buckinghamshire branch of the London and North Western line, which joins the Oxford branch at Verney Junction, 23¾ miles from Banbury and is thereby connected with the main line at Bletchley, 7½ miles farther on: this branch was opened to Banbury, May 1, 1850: the Great Western railway which also has a station here on the Oxford and Birmingham branch was opened to Banbury in 1852: the construction of the Banbury and Cheltenham Direct railway is now completed, but the line has not yet been opened; the Oxford canal also passes through the town, connecting it with the Thames. There are several wharfs and a dock for building and repairing barges: the commercial and passenger traffic to the Buckinghamshire branch southward, to Northamptonshire eastward and northward, and the western traffic to the cities of Worcester, Hereford and Gloucester, through the Midland railway, is largely carried on from Banbury as a centre. About 300 carriers also visit Banbury weekly from the surrounding towns and villages.

The borough was incorporated by Queen Mary by a charter dated 26th Jan. 1554, appointing the election of a bailiff and 12 aldermen; the privileges of the corporation were increased and the borough made a mayoral town under a new charter granted by James I. 28th June, 1608; these charters, however, were surrendered to the Crown in 1683, and a new charter was granted by Charles II. enlarging the jurisdiction of the borough, but the surrender not having been enrolled, the corporation resumed them under a Proclamation of King James II. 25th October, 1688; in 1717, the charter of James I. was forfeited in consequence of political disturbances, but on a petition of the inhabitants, George I. granted them a new charter, dated July 16th, 1718, which remained in force until the Municipal Reform Act of 1835.

The governing body of the borough now consists of the mayor, 4 aldermen and 12 councillors. The ancient honorary office of high steward is filled by the Right Hon. and Ven. the Lord Saye and Sele: the borough has a commission of the Peace and a separate court of quarter sessions, presided over by a Recorder. The Public Health Acts have been adopted for a district comprising the area of the parliamentary borough, which includes the municipal borough and the township of Neithrop, both in Oxfordshire, and the hamlets of Grimsbury and Nethercote, in the parish of Warkworth, lying on the eastern side of the Cherwell, and in Northamptonshire. The Local Board of Health consists of 12 members, 6 of whom are appointed by the town council and 6 elected by the non-corporate parts of the district. The office is at the Town hall.

Banbury returns one member to Parliament.

The church of St. Mary is a modern structure in a heavy and tasteless Classical style, the erection of which was begun under the authority of an Act of Parliament in 1793: and was sufficiently completed for use in 1797; but the work was not entirely finished until 1822: the old church, a fine cruciform edifice of the Perpendicular period, with a central battlemented tower terminating in eight pinnacles, and containing 8 bells, was wantonly destroyed in 1792, under pretence of rebuilding, in order, it is said, to find profitable employment for certain local builders; and the massive fabric, after much trouble, had eventually to be removed by means of gunpowder. The present church consists of a square of 90 feet, with twelve Composite columns cutting off an aisle 16 feet wide on every side and supporting a shallow-domed circular ceiling in the centre; each aisle consists of 5 bays, separated from the body of the church by columns of red Warwickshire sandstone with capitals of terra cotta; the aisles are vaulted in plaster and a gallery surrounds the interior on three sides; the interior of the chancel, originally forming a square of about 28 feet, has been entirely remodelled and is now apsidal, the former chancel arch being removed and a new roof, connected with that of the nave, constructed: the choir has been brought out into the nave and surmounted by a low stone and marble wall, according to the Basilican arrangement; the choir stalls are of oak, handsomely carved in an appropriate style: the wall of the apse is divided into three spaces by fluted pilasters of the Composite order, these enclose, in as many groups, life-sized figures of the twelve Apostles, with examples of scripture trees, the palm, the olive, the apple and the fig rising behind them, the whole being exquisitively painted in colour on a gold ground; while the frankincense, roses, and oak of Mamre (Abraham's oak) are introduced in the panels: over all runs a broad frieze of grapes and vine foliage with texts; the ceiling of the apse is coloured a turquoise blue and powdered with gold stars, representing the firmament: the remaining spaces of the side walls and the lunette windows are occupied by figures of the four Archangels bearing scrolls: the semi-dome is occupied by a large figure of Our Lord enthroned in Majesty; while the four-and-twenty elders appear at His feet with the signs of the four Evangelists,and the seven lamps; the whole composition is intended to illustrate Rev. Chap. iv. and has been executed under the direction of A. W. Blomfield esq. M.A.: all the windows of the church are stained: those in the galleries represent in medallions the life of Christ and those below the galleries exhibit in a similar form the Parables of Our Lord; three are memorials; there is a monument of granite and marble by Gwilt and Hartley in the north aisle to Anne,wife of Bernard Brocas esq. 1824, with a marble sitting figure of a female bearing a cross, and the arms of Brocas &Pigott; in the south aisle is a monument of similar character, to the Pigott family 1790-1820; the former altar-piece, a large painting of a dead Christ, with a Virgin, and other attendants, reputed to be by Correggio, is now hung under the south gallery; the font is a square basin of white marble, panelled with coloured marbles and supported on varigated shafts: there is a carved oak eagle lectern, and a fine organ with 38 stops, opened in 1859; the exterior of the building is rusticated and has at the west end a spacious semicircular portico supported by columns of the Tuscan order: above this, in three diminishing stages, rises a circular tower; the second stage being surrounded by Ionic columns, above which is a balustrading; the upper stage terminates in a dome with vane: the tower contains a clock and 8 bells, some of which hung in the tower of the old church, and has a total height of 133 feet; the church will seat 2,500 persons, including 500 free seats and 150 sittings for the school children: the communion plate includes four chalices of silver, one of which has a cover and dated 1575, two silver flagons given by M. Cope esq. in 1723, four silver salvers, presented by Mary Longe in 1827 and some other vessels. The register dates from the year 1558. The living is a vicarage with the chapelry of Neithrop annexed, gross yearly value £290 with residence and £120 for curate, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1881, by the Rev. Charles Fleetwood Porter M.A. of Caius College, Cambridge and surrogate.

South Banbury is an ecclesiastical parish formed in 1846 out of the mother parishes of Banbury and Warkworth, Northamptonshire. The church, called Christ Church, erected in 1853 from designs by Benjamin Ferry esq. is an elegant structure of Bletchingdon stones with freestone dressings in the Decorated style consisting of chancel, nave, aisles, sacristy and a tall pinnacled tower on the north side, added in 1880: there are small galleries at the west end of the church running entirely across the building; the stained east window was erected by voluntary subscriptions as a memorial to H.R.H. the late Prince Consort and there are other memorial windows in the chancel and aisles, erected by Mr. Albert Kimberley, Mr. Henry Ward and Mr. J. Fortescue, besides two commemorating the Rev. Charles Forbes, first vicar of this parish, and the Rev. J. D. Fish, a former curate: there are 944 sittings, of which 694 are free. The register dates from the year 1853. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £300 with residence and £120 for curate, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1878 by the Rev. Thomas Julius Henderson M.A. of Wadham College, Oxford and surrogate.

St. Paul's, Neithrop, a chapel of ease to the parish church, consists of chancel, nave, north aisle, vestry,organ chamber, south porch, and a turret over the western entrance containing 1 bell: the stained east window represents scenes in the life of Our Savour, and the west window incidents in the life of St. Paul and there are four smaller stained windows in the chancel. A grant of £230 towards the erection of this church was made by the Incorporated Society for the Enlargement, Building and Repairing of Churches and Chapels, on condition that 381 seats should be reserved for the use of the poorer inhabitants of this parish for ever, such seats being the whole of the seats in the nave and aisle.

The Catholic church of St. John, situated in South Bar street, completed in 1838, with Presbytery and Elementary schools attached from designs by Mr Derrick, of Oxford; the edifice is built entirely of freestone and consists of a chancel with pentagonal battlements and Decorated windows, nave and a western battlemented tower of four stages with a clock and heavy crocketed pinnacles; there are three good stained windows at the east end of the church, representing the Blessed Virgin Mary and Infant Jesus, St. John the Evangelist and St. John the Baptist: the west front is adorned with canopied niches, and in the garden, on the south side, is a cross with floriated head rising from a pedestal on three steps.

The Wesleyan chapel, Marlborough road, which takes the place of the first chapel, erected in 1804, was erected in 1864-5 and opened May 9th, 1865, by the Rev. Dr. Waddy: it is built of Brackley stone, with Bath stone dressings in the Early Decorated style and is cruciform in plan, with a light octagonal tower and spire rising on the right of the principal front: the interior is surrounded on three sides by a spacious gallery and is calculated to seat from 1,100 to 1,200 persons including 430 free sittings; the pulpit is of carved oak, relieved by shafts of ebony and mahogany, and is raised upon a base of white freestone; the communion table, with its enclosing rails, being in front of it the space around being paved with squares of white stone and black marble. The total cost of the building, designed by Mr. George Woodhouse, of Bolton-le-Moors, was £7,000.

The Congregational church in South Bar street was erected in 1857 and will seat about 600 persons. The building, which has lately been restored and decorated at a cost of £400,is in style an adaptation of Domestic Doric, arranged as a central block, with pediment and wings, the nave is lighted by a lantern carried on four massive Doric columns and the aisles by twelve pairs of windows. There are galleries with open balustraded fronts on the north, south and west sides : the communion table is enclosed by a handsomely carved rail : the interior is decorated with colour and a sparing use of gold. Behind the chapel is a commodious lecture room and schoolroom having a high wood dado, portions of which are hung upon hinges and, for sunday school purposes, can be turned out so as to form partitions, dividing the room into 17 separate class compartments in which 200 children can be taught with ease.

The chapel of the English Presbyterians, situated in the Horsefair opposite St. Mary's Church, is a Gothic structure, in the Early English style and was built on the old site in the year 1850. The original building was erected in the time of Charles II.

The Baptist chapel, situated in Bridge street, was erected in 1841, and is a plain building adorned in front with six columns of the Grecian Ionic order ; it will seat about 400 persons and has schoolrooms in the rear erected in 1858, at a cost of upwards of £200 and capable of holding between two and three hundred children.

The Primitive Methodist chapel, in Broad street, a plain building erected in 1838 and seating 200 persons has been sold, and the congregation have purchased and repaired for their services the old Wesleyan chapel in Church lane. The Calvinist chapel, in West Bar street will seat 150 persons ; the Unitarian chapel, and the meeting house of the Society of Friends are in the Horsefair, the latter seats about 300 persons ; the "Brethren" hold their services in the Temperance Hall ; and Disciples of Christ, have also a place of worship.

The Cemetery,containing about 3½ acres, is on the Southam road to the north of the town ; there are mortuary chapels, erected in 1860, for the Church of England and the Nonconformists.

The Town Hall, erected in 1854, at a cost of £5,737, stands in the centre of the market place and is a rectangular building of stone in the Gothic style of the fifteenth century with an octagonal battlemented tower on its eastern front, the lower stage of which forms a porch, overhung by a projecting balcony ; from within the parapet rises a kind of irregular spire, in which is an illuminated clock : the first floor contains the Common Hall, approached by a stone staircase in the tower ; this room is 60 feet long by 34 wide, with a recess for the magistrate's bench, the partitions forming which are moveable, so as to make the whole area available for concerts and public meetings ; the room thus cleared will seat 600 persons ; at one end of the hall is a portrait of Mr. Tancred, for 25 years M.P. for the borough : the building also contains a retiring room for the magistrates and recorder, council chamber and a private staircase as an approach to the bench for magistrates and witnesses ; on the ground floor, beside the Borough Police station there are six cells for prisoners, a volunteer armoury and an engine-house. The general quarter sessions and borough magistrates' meetings are held at the Town Hall, the latter in petty sessions every Monday at 10 a.m. The County Court is also held here monthly.

In the Market place are two buildings, each of which has been used as a Corn Exchange ; the one known as the Cornhill Exchange was erected in 1857, it has a good stone frontage with eight coupled pillars of the Corinthian order supporting a pediment, surmounted by a statue ; on either side are shallow wings with frieze and balustrading crowned with ornamental urns and is the property of Mr J. P. Barford, being now used on market days as a butter and poultry market ; the other, formerly called the Central Corn Exchange, and now known as the Exchange Hall, is the property of Mr. T. W. Boss, it has a spacious interior and is chiefly used for theatrical and other entertainments.

The Temperance Hall, in Parsons street, is a large brick building with Bath stone facings, erected in 1876 at a cost of £4,500 ; it contains a large hall, constructed to hold 500 persons, with coffee rooms, lodge rooms and suitable offices ; a portion of it is used as a British Workman's room.

The Water Works and works of the Banbury Gas Company are at Grimsbury, the latter company was formed in 1833, with a capital of £3,500 ; the present capital is £10,000, in one thousand shares, on which a yearly dividend is paid of 7½ per cent. The Post Office is in the High street.

In 1862 a County Police Station was built in the Newland, where the county magistrates hold their petty sessions for the district every alternate Thursday ; it has also dwellings for superintendent, one sergeant and three constables.

In Church Passage on the north side of the High street, is a building used by the Mechanic's Institution, with a convenient reading room and library, the meetings of the Local Board of Health also held here.

There are three newspapers printed and published in Banbury, namely,—the "Banbury Guardian," established in 1838, and the "Banbury Advertiser," in 1854, with which is published the "Banbury Beacon," each having an extensive circulation in this and the neighbouring counties.

In the town are two first-class hotels, commercial inns and posting houses, viz:—The White Lion and the Red Lion, both in High street, with a service of flys and omnibuses to meet each train ; and there are several other good commercial hotels and inns.

A weekly market is held on Thursday ; and fairs on the first Thursday in January, the first Thursday after Old Twelfth day (the Horse Fair commences on the preceding Monday), the first and third Thursdays in February, the first and third Thursdays in March, the first and third Thursdays in April, the first and third Thursdays in May, the first and third Thursdays in June, the first and third Thursdays in July, the first and third Thursdays in August, the first and third Thursdays in September, the first Thursday in October, the first Thursday after Old Michaelmas day, statute (for hiring servants), (holiday fair), the first and third Thursdays in November, the first Thursday in December, and the second Thursday before Christmas.

There are several breweries, extensive agricultural implement works, established and maintained by Messrs. Samuelson and Co. two old established local banks, branch offices of the London and County Banking Company, established here in 1845 ; the Birmingham Banking Company, and the Bucks and Oxon Union Bank, besides a Savings Bank, established in 1818, and a Penny Bank. The manufacture of shag and plush, made from the hair of the Turkish goat and furnishing employment here to about 200 persons, roller webs, summer horse clothing, rick sheets, sacking, rope, and tents, is actively prosecuted, and malting, girth weaving, brick and tile making and woolstapling, are also carried on and there are corn mills on the river Cherwell ; but the product for which Banbury is chiefly famous, and which has given it a national reputation, are its delicious and inimitable cakes, first introduced in 1608, which are still made in large quantities, and exported to all parts of the kingdom.

Adjoining the Oxford road are extensive nurseries and horticultural buildings works belonging to the executors of the late Mr. P. J. Perry ; the nurseries are pleasantly situated and command excellent views of the surrounding neighbourhood.

Rhubarb is cultivated and prepared in this neighbourhood in considerable quantities for medicinal purposes.

The Horton Hospital in the Oxford road was commenced in June, 1869, by the late Miss Horton, of Middleton Cheney, and of Highbury, London, and was intended by her to be a gift to the town of Banbury. Her death in July, 1869, caused a stoppage of the work for some months, but they were resumed in February, 1870, by her great-nephew, J. H. Horton esq. who was desirous of carrying out her wishes. The building, which stands in its own grounds, is in Domestic Gothic style and is constructed of red brick with black bands and Bath stone dressings ; it consists of a centre block with lofty tower, containing the executive portion of the establishment, and two wings, in which are the wards for male and female patients respectively, arranged on what is known as the Pavilion system : with the exception of the kitchen, and bed-rooms for the surgeon and matron, the whole of this hospital is on the ground floor ; in the tympanum, over the windows of the wards, are carved the arms of the Horton family and the monograms of the late Miss Horton and J. H. Horton esq. combined. The grounds are laid out as a garden for the use of the patients. A well-designed railing with gates forms the boundary of the grounds towards the road. The whole of the works under the contracts, amounting to a little over £6,000, were carried out from the designs and under the superintendence of the architect, Mr. Charles H. Driver, of London.

There are numerous charitable institutions within the parish, supported by voluntary contributions, viz., the Old Charitable Society, for the relief of indigent townsmen ; the Charitable Society, for visiting and relieving the sick distressed poor at their own habitations, and two Clothing Clubs. Adjoining the churchyard of St. Mary's are six almshouses for 12 poor old and impotent people, who are nominated by the charity trustees.

The Countess of Arran's charity now produces about £65 yearly for apprenticing, and J. Metcalfe's £5 yearly for same purpose ; the Bridge Estate yields £97 per annum, for public uses and there are other charities providing £80 yearly for distribution in bread and clothing, and £15 10s. for distribution in money.

St. John's Priory, South Bar street, was established in 1850 for the order of Sisters of Charity of St. Paul, whose efforts are directed to the visitation of the sick and the institution of children. On account of the great increase in the number of sisters, the principal establishment has been removed to Selly Oak, near Birmingham, a sufficient number of ladies remaining to superintend the boarding school established at the Priory and the Catholic Elementary schools. The convent forms a portion of the original building of the Priory of St. John the Baptist, which existed here as early as 1209.

At the top of High street, near to the site of "Old Banbury Cross," a new and elegant cross was erected in 1859 from a design by Mr. Gibbs, of Oxford; it is hexagonal in form and 52 feet in height, and is divided into three stages, the whole being elevated on a flight of six steps; the panels of the central portion are richly carved with foliage, and enclose the emblazoned arms of Banbury, those of the Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia (in commemoration of whose marriage it was erected), Kings Charles I. and George I. Queens Mary and Victoria, the Earls of Banbury and Guildford, Viscount Saye and Sele, Sir William Cope, Sir William Compton, the Bishop of Lincoln, and the Rev. W. Whateley, vicar of Banbury from 1610 to 1639.

The Banbury Recreation Ground and Bathing Company Limited, was established in 1867, with a capital of £2,500, in 2,500 shares of £1 each; 12 acres of ground have been purchased for recreation grounds, and a swimming bath was opened in May, 1868.

Of the ancient castle of Banbury, erected about 1125, by Alexander, Bishop of Lincoln, part of the walls of the north side, with some vestiges of a stone staircase alone remain; it was formerly of great strength and sustained two severe sieges in 1442 and in 1444, during the war between the houses of York and Lancaster; at the beginning of the Civil war it was strengthened for the Parliamentary party with new bastions, but on 27th October, 1642, being attacked by the royal army, surrendered without a blow; the town was twice fired by the royalists in 1643-4, and in 1644 was hotly besieged by the rebels, when an attempt was made to storm the castle, which, however, was relieved by the royalists on 26th October, 1644; it was again besieged in 1646 by Colonel Whalley, and finally surrendered by the governor, Sir William Compton, May 8, 1646; the town had also five bars or gates, three of which existed till the last century. A number of ancient timbered houses, with elaborately carved barge boards, and pargetting, still remain, amongst which one in the High street may be especially noted, with projecting semicircular windows, overhanging cornice, and triple gables, and on the front an old-fashioned sun-dial, with the motto "Aspice et abi," and the date 1600; the gateway of the Old George bears date 1614, and the vicarage porch that of 1649; the Reindeer Inn, in Parsons street, is entered by a pair of venerable gates dated 1570, and other parts of the house have the dates 1624 and 1637, and both this inn and the house in High street have some fine panelled and wainscoted chambers. More of such houses would probably be still extant, but for the calamitous fire which devastated the town on Sunday, March 2nd, 1628, and destroyed at least one-third of it. Coins of various Roman emperors have been discovered here, and in a field called "Berry Moor," near the town, are the remains of a camp-like amphitheatre. Five miles and a half north-east of the town is Danes more, the scene of an engagement between the Saxons and Danes, and later of a battle fought in 1469 between the royal army under the Earl of Pembroke and a rebel force led by the Earl of Warwick. William Lord Knollys, of Grey's Court, Treasurer of the Household to Queen Elizabeth, was created Earl of Banbury by Charles I. in 1626, and was High Steward of Banbury until his decease in 1632. The country around is fertile and most beautifully varied; it also comprises some of the finest portions of arable and pasture land in the county, being the rich red and sandy loam.

Wykham Park is the residence of William Mewburn esq.

The parish of Banbury comprises the townships of Banbury and Neithrop; in 1881 the entire population of the parish was 9,660; the area is 3,150 acres; entire rateable value, £4,078. The municipal borough comprises Banbury township only; the population in 1881 was 3,600; and the rateable value, £19,101. The parliamentary borough includes the townships of Banbury and Neithrop (Oxon), and the hamlets of Grimsbury and Nethercote, in Warkworth parish (Northampton); the total population in 1881 was 12,072.

NEITHROP (i.e. Netherthorp), a township of this parish, virtually forms part of it, although not within the municipal limits; it surrounds the town on the Oxfordshire side of the river Cherwell; its area is 3,026A. 1R. 11P. and the rateable value, £21,680; population in 1881 was 6,060.

CALTHORPE and EASINGTON adjoining Banbury to the south, WYKHAM, 2 miles south, and HARDWICK, one north, are hamlets of the parish of Banbury.

Parish Clerks, (St. Mary's), W. Willett; (Christ Church), Alfred Stanley.

BARFORD ST. MICHAEL (OR GREAT BARFORD), is a parish and village 2 miles west-north-west from Deddington, on the road from Buckingham to Chipping Norton, 5½ south-west from Banbury, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situated on the river Swere. The church of St. Michael, which is situated on an eminence,is a structure originally of the twelfth and fourteenth centuries and consists of chancel, nave, south aisle and a low embattled tower at the east end of the aisle; the chancel retains a piscina and locker; the nave, separated from the aisle by an arcade of three arches, is Decorated and has a north doorway of Early Norman date, with beak-head moulding; there is a large font of the same character and a pulpit of carved wood with hexagonal stone base. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1643, but is imperfect; marriages, 1721; burials, 1678. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £70 with residence, in the gift of W. H. Hall esq. and held since 1852 by the Rev. Philip Hookins B.A. of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. The Baptists and Methodist Free Church have each a chapel here. The poor's land of 11 acres yields £25 yearly for fuel. Shepherd's charity produces £9 a year for apprenticing. W. H. Hall esq. who is lord of the manor, is the principal landowner. Mr. Joseph Hollier and Mrs. Tims are also landowners. The soil rests on the oolite rock; the land is arable and pasture. The chief crops are barley, wheat and turnips. The area is 1,180 acres; rateable value, £2,118; the population in 1881 was 298.

Parish Clerk, George Enock.

STEEPLE BARTON is a parish consisting of three hamlets, STEEPLE, MIDDLE and SESSWELLS BARTON, and distant 5 miles south-west from Deddington, 7 north from Woodstock and 3 from the Heyford station, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Woodstock, rural deanery of Woodstock, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The small river Dorne, a tributary of the Evenlode, flows through the parish. The church of St. Mary is a structure chiefly in the Decorated and Perpendicular styles and consists of chancel, nave, south aisle, south porch and an embattled western tower of Perpendicular date, containing 5 bells; an arcade of five Decorated arches separates the nave and aisle; the porch retains a stoup; some of the open benches are Jacobean; in the chancel are memorials to the families of Croker 1568—1696, Sheldon 1670-81, and Gough 1706-27; Jane, wife of Lawrence Humphrey D.D. 1611; Sir Philip Constable, of Everingham, Yorks, 1664; and Winefride, widow of Stuart Walker gent. 1688; a brass is recorded to John Boldern M.A. a former vicar, 1577; the monuments of the Dormers were removed to 1851 to Rousham: the stained east window is a memorial to Henry Hall esq. and was erected by his children; the chancel was restored in 1879. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1678; marriages, 1695. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £170 with residence and 72 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Duke of Marlborough, who has two turns and Alexander William Hall esq. who has one turn in three and held since 1876 by the Rev. Frederic Parry Burnett M.A. of St. John's College, Cambridge. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels here. The poor's allotment of 29 acres, awarded in 1796, produces about £44 yearly, which is distributed in clothing and fuel to the poor of Steeple Barton and Westcott Barton in equal shares; Gould's charity of £5 yearly is for bread. Maiden Bower (maidian, strong, and beory, a fortress), a spot well known to the fox-hunter, is said to be a British earthwork; near to it, in this parish, on the turnpike road to Oxford, is a heap of stones, the ruin of a Druidical altar, called the "hoarstone," which remained entire till destroyed by the farmer in occupation in 1843. Barton Abbey, the seat of the Hon. Mrs. Hall, is a handsome building pleasantly situated, with lawn and a lake in front. Charles W. Upton-Cottrell-Dormer esq. is lord of the manor of Sesswell Barton, the trustees of Joseph Painter esq. of Middle Barton and A. W. Hall esq. of Steeple Barton. The principal landowners are A. W.Hall esq. D.L.,J.P.Viscount Clifden and Thomas Painter esq. There are other smaller landowners. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, the same. The land is chiefly arable. The area is 2,710 acres; rateable value, £4,352; the population in 1881 was 915.

WESTCOTT BARTON is a parish and village on the main road from Chipping Norton to Bicester, 3 miles west from Heyford station, on the Oxford and Birmingham (G. Western) railway, 5 miles south-west from Deddington and 7 north from Woodstock, in the hundred of Wootton union and county court district of Woodstock, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The river Dorne runs through the village. The church of St. Edward is an ancient building of mixed styles, its earliest portions being Norman; it consists of chancel, nave, south aisle and porch, with a Perpendicular western tower surmounted by pinnacles; the chancel retains a stone sedile and a small piscina; the chancel arch is Norman, with a Perpendicular screen; the two original Norman arches and pillars of the aisle arcade are still standing, but the windows of the aisle are in the Perpendicular style; the font appears to be Norman; in the churchyard remain the steps and base of a Perpendicular cross; this church was carefully and well restored in 1856 under the direction of the late G. E. Street esq. R.A. The register dates from the year 1559, but its earlier portion is very defective. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £220, with residence and 208 acres of glebe, in the gift of Rev. J. Y. Seagrave and held since 1852 by the Rev. Edmund Leopold Lockyer M.A. of Emmanuel College, Cambridge. The poor's allotment of 29 acres, awarded in 1796, produces about £44 yearly, which is equally divided in clothing and fuel between this and the adjoining parish of Steeple Barton; there is also a bread charity of £4 15s. arising from rent of land, given by Norwood and others. The Rev. Jenner Marshall M.A. is lord of the manor, whose seat, the Manor House, is a stone mansion, pleasantly situated. The Revs. Jenner Marshall M.A. and E. L. Lockyer M.A. Viscount Clifden and A. W. Hall esq. J.P., D.L. are the principal landowners. The soil is mostly limestone brash; subsoil, white limestone. The land is arable with a small proportion pasture. The area is 650 acres; rateable value, £1,440; the population in 1881 was 236.

BECKLEY is a parish 4¾ miles north-east from Oxford, on the borders of Otmoor, in the hundred of Bullingdon, union of Headington, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Islip and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The Roman road from Alcester to Dorchester passed through the parish, and considerable remains of it may still be traced, particularly across Otmoor and in some arable land on the hill in a direct line from it. The church of St. Mary is an ancient structure, of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, nave, aisles, south porch and a central embattled tower containing a clock and 5 bells: the chancel is good Decorated, dating from about 1320, and has an east window of three lights, with flowing tracery and side windows in the same style, in the heads of which remain some beautiful fragments of fourteenth century glass; there is a plain piscina: the tower is supported on plain recessed arches, and has a parapet and cornice of Perpendicular date; the sanctus bell hangs in a small opening with a foliated head; the staircase to the tower is in a round turret, with pyramidal roof and finial at the north-east angle: the nave is Perpendicular, of the time of Henry VII. and has two arches only on each side, on clustered pillars with moulded caps: the aisles are Decorated and Perpendicular, and the south aisle retains image brackets at its eastern end; from each aisle is a blocked hagioscope: the font is a plain cylinder of stone, placed against the north-east pillar of the nave, attached to which is a small stone desk, supported by a shaft with moulded cap; to the south-east pier a wooden desk is attached; the pulpit retains an hour glass stand. The register dates from the year 1703. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £117 with residence, in the gift of Mrs. Mina Cooke and held since 1847 by the Rev. George Theophilus Cooke B.D. fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. Croke's almshouses were erected by Sir George Croke in 1636 for four poor men and as many poor women of this parish and of Waterstock and Chilton (Bucks); the yearly income arising from land and money in the funds is about £96, of which £20 is paid to the minister of Studley or Horton; from a charity left in 1764 by Margaret and Stephen Wheatland to the parish of Stanton St. John, a yearly sum of about £6 is paid for the education of 10 children of Beckley and Horton. The Earl of Abingdon, who is lord of the manor, and G. L. Cooke esq. are the principal landowners. The soil is sand and clay; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans and oats. The area is 4,100 acres; rateable value, £2,956; the population in 1881 was 354.

Studley is a hamlet, situated on a hill, 6½ miles north-east-by-east from Oxford, on the borders of Bucks. This hamlet was formerly in Buckinghamshire, but by the Acts 2 & 3 William IV. cap. 64 and 7 & 8 Vict. cap. 61, it was annexed to Oxfordshire. Studley Priory was founded and endowed about the middle of the reign of Henry II. by Bernard de Walercio or Wallery, in honour of the Virgin Mary, for nuns of the order of St. Benedict: at the time of its surrender, November 9, 1540, there were fifteen nuns, and the revenue amounted to £82 4s. 4d. yearly: it was granted, 31 Henry VIII. to John Croke, a descendant of the Blounts; the mansion, as now existing, is believed to have been chiefly built by the prioress and convent in the fifteenth century; the chapel, forming a north wing, is ascribed to Sir George Croke kt. one of the Justices of the King's Bench, 1628-42, and appears to have been formed out of the ancient rectory; it is a plain oblong building, with open seats, and a pulpit retaining, like the church, an hour glass stand: there are memorials in the chapel to Alexander Croke, 1673; Richard Croke, 1698, and Edward Croke, 1694; Charlotte, wife of William Ledwell, 1763, and Mary their daughter, 1748: the principal entrance to the house is by a porch on the west side, ornamented with Doric and Ionic pilasters, and the shields of Croke, Cave, Unton, Blount and Bennett, with the dates 1587 and 1622, and an invocatory inscription; this porch is also believed to have been built by Sir George Croke: the site of the priory church is yet unknown: the mansion is now the residence of John Henderson esq. The area is 660 acres; rateable value, £950; the population in 1881 was 49.

Horton hamlet is 6 miles north-east from Oxford and 2 from Beckley. A chapel of ease has been erected here, at the cost of the incumbent of Beckley, and consists of chancel and nave with a small tower containing 2 bells. The area is 1,285 acres; rateable value, £1,525; the population in 1881 was 243.

BEGBROOK is a parish and village within the parliamentary borough of Woodstock, 2½ miles south-east from Woodstock, 1½ from Woodstock Road railway station and 5 north-north-west from Oxford, in the hundred of Wootton, union of Woodstock, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The Oxford canal passes on the east. The church of St. Michael is a small but ancient edifice, originally Norman, and consists of chancel and nave, with a low saddle-backed western tower: the chancel is Norman and has a small

Norman east window, which, as well as others in the chancel, is stained, one being filled with shields of arms; another, on the south of the chancel, was erected to the memory of T. Robinson esq.: the chancel arch is also Norman, with zig-zag and embattled mouldings and ornamented shafts: the nave has a high-pitched open roof and a Norman south doorway with zig-zag mouldings and recessed shafts; the windows are Modern Perpendicular, from an example in the cloisters of Christ Church, Oxford; the tower, originally Norman, has Decorated windows; the ancient font is octagonal and Perpendicular; near the south door is a coped stone coffin lid, said to form part of the founder's tomb: considerable alterations were made during the years 1820-8 and the church was partly repaired in 1846: in the churchyard, near the south door, is the base and part of the shaft of an ancient cross. The register dates from the year 1664. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £170 with residence and 37 acres of glebe, in the gift of Sir Henry William Dashwood bart. who has three turns and Brasenose College one turn, and held since 1877 by the Rev. George Richmond Downes M.A. of Brasenose College. Round Castle, a fortification near the church on the west, is in Bladon parish: a pleasant path through the meadows conducts from this village to Bladon. Sir Henry W. Dashwood bart. is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil is loam; subsoil, clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley and beans. The area is 612 acres; rateable value, £1,296; the population in 1881 was 68.

BENSINGTON (called BENSON) is a large village and parish within the parliamentary borough of Wallingford, situated on the banks of the Isis, which separates it from Berkshire, partly in the hundred of Ewelme and partly in the hundred of Dorchester and in the union and county court district of Wallingford, rural deanery of Cuddesdon, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 12 miles south-east from Oxford, 14½ north-west from Reading, 2 from the Great Western Railway station at Wallingford. Bensington was at an early period a place of importance; the Roman Akeman street crossed the river here, and some remains of it, still known as "Medlers-bank," run westwards of the church. Nearest bridge up, Shillingford, 1¼ mile; down, Wallingford, same distance. The church of St. Helen is an edifice of mixed styles and originally Norman, consisting of chancel, nave, aisles, south porch and a western tower containing 6 modern bells: the chancel is in part Late Norman and the chancel arch a very fine example of Transition Norman; the former was lengthened in the fourteenth century and has a good three-light east window of that date, with reticulated tracery, filled with stained glass as a memorial to various members of the Powell family: the aisles are separated from the nave by arcades of three arches on each side supported on round pillars with Early English caps and bases; both the aisles are Decorated: the tower, which is massive and embattled with pinnacles at the angles, was added to the church in 1770 and is a poor example of Modern Gothic: the font is of Early English date; the church contains a defaced brass to William Freeman, of Preston Crowmarsh, with portions of a Latin inscription and verses; others are recorded to Thomas Freeman, 1550; Stephen Smith, of Turner's court, 1606; Elizabeth, wife of William Stompe, of Crowmarsh Battell, 1590 and to Ralph and Jane Welch, seventeenth century; on the south wall is a tablet with a singular antithetical inscription to Ralph Quelch, 1629 and Jane his wife, 1619: the chancel was rebuilt in the year 1861: there are sittings for 300 persons. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1565; marriages, 1569. The living is a vicarage, yearly value £234 with residence and 17½ acres of glebe, in the gift of Christ Church, Oxford, and held since 1881 by the Rev. John Edward Field M.A. of Worcester College, Oxford. There is a church estate of 57 acres, producing £80 yearly. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Baptists; a Free church was erected in 1879 by public subscription to seat 200 persons; Rev. Charles Williams, pastor. Charities for distribution amount to £14 yearly. The Dean and students of Christ Church, Oxford, are lords of the manor. The principal landowners are Lord Elphinstone, the trustees of the late R. A. Newton and Mr. W. Newton. The soil is loam; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, beans, barley and oats. The area, including Fyfield, is 2,922 acres; rateable value, £6,598; the population in 1881 was 1,145.

Fyfield (or FIFIELD), near Wallingford, is a small hamlet in the parish of Bensington, 2½ miles north-east from Wallingford. Here is a very ancient manor house, which is supposed to have been formerly a strong fortress; the walls are of immense thickness, but the building has been modernized. The trustees of Robert Aldworth Newton esq. are lords of the manor and hold in their own right the offices of constable, assessor and surveyor. The population in 1881 was 5.

Preston Crowmarsh is a small hamlet of Bensington, beautifully situated on the banks of the Isis, ½ mile south.

ROKE, ¾ mile north, ROKE MARSH, 1 mile north, CROWMARSH BATTLE, ¾ mile south, and LITTLEWORTH are other places in the parish.

BERRICK SALOME is a parish and village 4 miles north-east from Wallingford and 6 west from Watlington, in the hundred of Ewelme, union and county court district of Wallingford, rural deanery of Aston, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church, named St. Helen's, is an ancient structure of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, south chapel, porch and a wooden tower at the west end, with pryamidal roof and containing six bells: the chancel is Decorated and retains a piscina, but there is no chancel arch; the nave is Perpendicular and there is a south chapel of the same date, with an Early English window and bracket under it. The register dates from the year 1590. The living is a chapelry annexed to Chalgrove, joint gross yearly value £379 with 7 acres of glebe at Berrick, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church and held since 1832 by the Rev. Robert French Laurence M.A. and late student of Christ Church, who resides at Chalgrove vicarage. There are some small charities amounting to £13 yearly for distribution in bread and money and £1 10s. for education; the church land produces £11 a year. The representatives of the late Michael J. Blount esq. are lords of the manor. The principal landowners are Mr. John Deane, Lincoln College, Magdalen College, Oxford, Mr. Jonathan Weller and Miss Morrison. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans and peas. The land is loamy with gravel substrata. The area is 678 acres; rateable value, £992; the population in 1881 was 105.

BICESTER.

BICESTER is an agricultural market and union town, head of a county court district, parish and polling place for the county, in the hundred of Ploughley, rural deanery of Bicester, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford and includes the townships of MARKET END and KING'S END; it is situated on the eastern border of the county, adjoining Bucks and on the bank of a small stream called the Ray, falling into the Cherwell at Islip; the air is healthy and the water pure and to the use of it is attributed the celebrity the town has obtained for its excellent ale; it is situated on the old coach road from Birmingham and Leamington to London, from which it is distant 54½ miles, 13 north-east from Oxford, 15 south-east from Banbury, 17 north-west from Aylesbury, 10 south-west from Buckingham and 15 north-west from Thame. The London and North Western branch railway from Oxford to Bletchley passes through the parish and has a station near to the town. Bicester, anciently called Burinceastre, softened by time to the former, is supposed to have been founded in the seventh century. The etymology of its name is uncertain; by many it is conjectured to derive its name from Birinus (Birini Castrum), the Saxon canonized prelate and first bishop of Dorchester, in whose time it had been a frontier garrison and may possibly have been built by his advice from the ruins of Alchester, which was a fortified city, and a Roman station of considerable note under Aulus Plautius, the consul. Skinner (Etym. Ling. Angl.) conjectures the derivation to be from the Anglo-Saxon bern, a granary, and ceaster, a town.

The town consists principally of one long street, on the high road to Banbury; the Market place, with an outlet joining it to King's End, on the road to Wendlebury and Oxford, and two other streets branching from these called Chapel street and Crockwell, which latter appears to have been so called from an ancient well, existing there as far back as 1211, but now built over. In the Market place formerly stood the Town Hall and shambles, erected in 1622, but destroyed by a riotous assemblage of townspeople in 1826.

The town is governed by a Local Board, which holds its meetings on the first Monday in each month, at the Clerk's office, Market hill. The townships of King's End and Market End elect their own overseers, guardians and churchwardens, but the townships form one ecclesiastical parish.

The church of St. Eadburg is a spacious and handsome edifice of mixed styles, originally Norman and cruciform, with a central tower (taken down about 1420) and aisles; it now consists of chancel, with north chapel, clerestoried nave, aisles, north porch and a western battlemented tower, 75 feet in height, with pinnacles at the angles, panelled and crocketed and containing 6 bells and sanctus bell; aisles have been added, the south about the thirteenth, the north in the fourteenth and the western tower and north porch in the fifteenth century: the chancel has Roman walls and buttresses, with Decorated windows inserted and on the north side a Decorated arch of wide span, opening into the chapel; the rood arch and two others west of it are Early Norman; near these is a small straight-sided arch, with triangular head, supposed to be Saxon: the nave is separated from the south aisle by an arcade of four Early English arches on clustered piers, in the spandrils of two of which are some curious and rude sculptures in small panels let into the wall representing figures of knights armed with shields and swords under a crocketed arcading; the north arcade is composed of three Decorated arches, on octagonal pillars: the clerestory is Perpendicular and supports a good open timbered roof of the same date; in the south aisle is a small piscina of Perpendicular date; the north aisle retains part of a Norman string course, with zig-zag moulding; the doorway in this aisle is Decorated, but the south door Early English: there are some fragments of screen-work and a few of the original benches: the font is plain and polygonal expanding towards the top and is probably Early English: the church contains monuments to Sir Edward Turner bart. of Ambrosden Park, 1766, and Cassandra, his wife, 1770; Sarah, wife of the Rev. White Kennett B.D. vicar of Ambrosden, 1694; Robert Carver, 1698, and Maria, his wife, 1722, father and mother of Mrs. Kennett; Thomas Airson, 36 years vicar, 1752; Thomas Forbes, vicar, 1715, and William, son of Stephen Glynne, of Merton, esq.; in the chancel is a singular monument to five children of Samuel Blackwall esq. with a grotesque carving of as many skulls: there also remain brasses to William Staveley esq. "dominus de Bygnell," 1498, and his wife, Alice (Frances), 1500; Roger Moore esq. gentleman pensioner to Queen Elizabeth, slain on Her Majesty's service in Ireland, 1551, and Agnes (Husye), his wife, 1584; all three are inscriptions only: the church has been restored at an expense of £3,500, when the galleries erected in the last century on the north and south sides and at the west end were removed and the church re-seated: there is a stained window in the chancel representing The Ascension, to the memory of Sir E. P. Turner, lord of the manor of Market End, presented by Mrs. Fryer, his daughter; two small windows in the chancel given by the Turner family; and another in one of the north aisle windows to Major Lewis Coker, lord of the manor of King's End, who was accidentally drowned in 1858; a stained window has also been inserted in the tower in memory of Captain Style R.N. and family; another in the south-eastern transept to Thos. Tubb and family; and two have been presented by Mrs. Rogerson, in memory of her husband. In the churchyard, which is beautifully planted with trees and shrubs and carefully tended, is a stone inscribed with the names of Samuel Clarke and many others, who fell victims to the dreadful visitation of cholera in 1832, when more than 70 persons perished: the principal entrance is on the north side, by a wide path, pleasantly shaded with limes and leading to the north porch. The register dates from the year 1593. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £325 with residence and 126 acres of glebe, let for £252, in the gift of the trustees of the late Sir E. Page Turner bart. and held since 1881 by the Rev. John Blackburne-Kane M.A.T.C.D. presented pro hâc vice by J. Chinnery esq. The Curates Additional Aid and the Diocesan Spiritual Help Societies contribute towards the payment of curates.

The infant schoolroom in Crockwell is also licensed by the bishop of the diocese for divine service on Sundays.

The Wesleyan Methodist chapel, situated in Sheep street, was erected by subscription. The Congregational chapel, in Chapel street, was erected A.D. 1729, on a site purchased after the great fire of 1724; it contains, among other memorials, a monument to the Rev. John Troughton, 1739, and Sarah his wife, 1736; the chapel will seat 400 persons; the celebrated Colonel Gardiner was an attendant at this chapel, and the table which he used is still preserved: attached to it is a Sunday school, established in 1794, by Mr. James Jones. The United Free Methodist chapel in Sheep street was built in 1863.

The Cemetery situated on the south side of the town and communicating with the churchyard, of which it may be regarded as an extension, covers an area of 2 acres 3 poles and was opened in 1861; it is picturesquely laid out and contains a mortuary chapel for the use of Nonconformists.

A free reading-room for labouring men was opened in 1872 by the liberality of the Earl of Jersey, and is well supplied with the daily and weekly papers &c.

St. Edburg's Hall, situated near the Railway station, is an attractive building, erected by the exertions of the present vicar, on a site given by Jonas Paxton esq. from designs by Mr. E. G. Bruton, of Oxford, at a cost of £1,200; and the first stone was laid by the Baroness Schröder, June 14th, 1882, and was opened in December following: it comprises on the ground floor a large reading-room and library, with a refreshment-room, and on the upper floor an assembly room 62 by 26 feet.

The Agricultural and Horticultural Society, established in 1859, has been very successful and now numbers upwards of 300 members.

There are three weekly newspapers published here.

Lace making is carried on to a small extent amongst the poor of the town and adjoining villages. There are also a brewery and tannery.

The chief business of the inhabitants arises from the market and cattle fairs. Fairs are held here on the Friday in Easter week, first Friday in June and July, August 5th and 6th, Friday before and first Friday after the 11th of October and on Friday after December 11th. The market is held on Friday and a cattle market on the first and third Friday in every month, which is generally well attended.

The Benevolent Society provides articles of clothing &c. for poor women in childbed.

The Visiting Society, the Provident Society and the Dorcas Society (in connection with the parish church) are for supplying the poor with articles of clothing, soup and coals.

The Town Stock is a fund arising out of the rents of certain lands and tenements left by a will of very ancient date; the income, now amounting to about £275 per annum, was increased in 1867 by a gift of £1,000 by George Tubb esq. banker, Bicester, for the relief of decayed tradesmen and producing £30 yearly: the feoffees are George Tubb, J. H. Churchill, W. D. Cole, Jonas Paxton and R. Bathe: these charities, as well as Shirley's bequest of about £3 a year, are divided amongst certain pensioners. A charity of £30 per annum, left by W. Walker esq. of Stamford Hill, Middlesex, is for education and is divided between the Blue Coat School and the Church and Congregational Sunday Schools; and Carleton's of £2 for bread.

A hunt was established about 1820 by J. Ward esq. who built Swift's House, in the parish of Stoke Lyne, now the residence of Major-Gen. Sir Thomas Peyton bart.

The mansion of the Coker family is a handsome modern building, erected on the site of the ancient manor house called Nonnes or Nun's Place, in King's End, from the nuns of the priory of Merkyate in Bedfordshire, who once held this estate, and was purchased in the reign of Henry VIII by John Coker of Maponder, Dorset, and re-built by his grandson, John Coker, in 1682.

Bignell House, a handsome mansion situate in its own grounds, about one mile and a half from Bicester, is the residence of George Tyrwhitt-Drake esq.

Bicester was formerly the seat of a priory, founded by Gilbert Bassett, grandson of the first of that name, A.D. 1182, for a prior and eleven canons of the order of St. Augustine, and dedicated to the honour of St. Mary and St. Eadburg, the holy nun of Aylesbury, and it was subsequently further endowed by Egiline de Courtenay his widow, who, as well as one of the last lords Le Strange, and several of the D'Amories, lords of Bucknell and Goddington, was buried within its precincts. In 1536 the monastery was surrendered to the King by William Browne, prior, and 8 monks, its revenues being then altogether £183 14s. 9d. per annum; a great part of the monastic buildings, granted after the Dissolution to Charles, duke of Suffolk, seems to have remained standing for many years, and they were afterwards occupied by the Blounts; the site of the priory, in Place Yard, was excavated in 1819, when the foundations of the refectory and kitchen, with other remains, and fragments of carved work were discovered

The area of the whole parish is 2,580 acres, viz. Market End 1,043 and King's End 1,540; rateable value, £11,821; the population of the parish in 1881 was 3,306, Market End 2,977, King's End 329; at the beginning of the present century the total population was only 1,946.

MARKET END is a township and bailiwick, consisting of the lordship and manor, leased for a term of 10,000 years by the Earl of Derby, A.D. 1596, to whom it had passed from Gilbert Bassett (a younger son of Ralph Bassett, Chief Justice of England) and granted to him with six other knights' fees in the twelfth century: the reversion in fee simple was afterwards conveyed to certain persons in trust for all interested in the lease; the manor and estates were thus constituted a bailiwick, purchased for the use and benefit of those who might hereafter obtain possession of part of the demesne; the lordship of the manor is thus vested in all those persons who become purchasers under the original lease.

WRETCHWICK is a hamlet in the township of Bicester Market End, and under the control of the Bicester Local Board.

BINSEY, anciently called "Thornbury," is a parish on the borders of Berks, within the liberty of the city of Oxford, in the hundred of Wootton, county court district of Oxford, union of Abingdon, rural deanery, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 2 miles north-west from Oxford and is about a mile and three-quarters in length and three-quarters of a mile in breadth, lying on the western side of Port Meadow, from which it is divided by the river; the land on both sides of the river lies very low and in rainy seasons is often flooded. The church of St. Margaret, situated about ¼ mile north-west of the village, is an ancient structure of mixed styles, portions of it being probably older than the Conquest and consists of chancel, nave, south porch and an open gabled bell-cot at the east end of the nave, containing 2 bells: the church is about 48 feet long by 18 broad and has a Norman doorway with zig-zag moulding; in the chancel is a piscina and a niche: the font is a cylindrical basin, supported on round moulded shafts and plain blocks of stone, resting on a square base. The register dates from the year 1593. The living is a vicarage, yearly value £90, in the gift of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, and held by the Rev. Thomas Jones Prout M.A. of Christ Church, who resides at Oxford. Christ Church, Oxford, is lord of the manor and the principal landowner. The soil is gravel; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat and barley. The area is 470 acres; rateable value, £954 11s.; the population in 1881 was 95.

BIX (formerly two parishes bearing the names of Byxbrand and Byxgwbbyn, but now united into one) is a parish and straggling village, 3 miles north-west from Henley, 8 south-east from Wallingford and 11 north-east from Reading, in the hundred of Binfield, union and county court district of Henley, rural deanery of Henley, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford; it consists of a few houses situated on the high road from Henley to Oxford, on the borders of Bucks. The church of St. Michael (Bixgybwin) has been long demolished. The church of St. James (Bixbrand) is a small building of Norman origin, with tiled roof and wooden belfry attached, and stands in a field surrounded by a quick-set hedge, about a mile distant from the village, but is now closed and disused; the walls of this church are original and some of the Norman windows remain; there is also a round-headed chancel arch of the same date, with large blocked hagioscopes on either side: the new church of St. James, standing on Bix Common, is an edifice of flint with stone dressings, erected at a cost of about £2,400, defrayed by the Earl of Macclesfield, and was consecrated and opened in September, 1875; it consists of chancel, nave, transept, north aisle, and a belfry containing 2 bells. The register dates from the year 1577. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £550 with residence and 40 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Earl of Macclesfield and held since 1877 by the Hon. and Rev. Algernon Robert Parker M.A. of Christ Church, Oxford. Lord Camoys is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are Lord Camoys, Sir Francis George Stapleton bart. and William Dalziell Mackenzie esq. The soil is chalk and gravel; subsoil, chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats, turnips &c. The area is 3,075 acres; rateable value £2,438, the population in 1881 was 427.

MIDDLE and LOWER ASSENDEN are hamlets, partly in this and partly in Henley parish; UPPER ASSENDEN is in Pyrton parish.

BLACK BOURTON, see BOURTON.

BLADON is a parish and straggling village, within the parliamentary borough of Woodstock, 1½ miles south from Woodstock, 1¼ north-east from Handborough station, and 7 miles north-west from Oxford, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Woodstock, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford; it is bounded on the west by the river Glyme, near its junction with the Evenlode and adjoins the grounds of Blenheim. The church of St. Martin, situated on an acclivity, is a plain edifice in a modern style of Gothic, erected in 1802-4 at the cost of the 3rd Duke of Marlborough, consisting of chancel and nave, with a western embattled tower containing 3 bells, all cast in 1629; some of the old memorial stones from the previous church are preserved in the present church. The register dates from about the year 1545: and among other curious entries are these:—"1663, for Strasburg in Alsatia, in Germany, 1s. 6d.; 1681, for the French Protestants, £1 18s. 9d,; 1700, for the redemption of captives in the Empire of Fez and Morocco." The living is a rectory, with the chapelry of Woodstock annexed, joint gross yearly value £407 with residence and 170 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Duke of Marlborough K.G. and held since 1876 by the Rev. Arthur Majendie T.A.K.C.L., who resides at Woodstock, and is surrogate, chaplain to the Woodstock union, and domestic chaplain to the Duke of Marlborough. There is a Wesleyan Chapel, erected in 1878, also a Primitive Methodist Chapel. Woodstock Cemetery is situated in this parish. The village contains one example of a good fifteenth-century house with mullioned windows and two bold round chimneys. Mr. W. Hopkins' charity of £11 yearly is for apprenticing, and there are charities amounting to £7 12s. for distribution in bread, and £1 15s. left by Mr. P. Hopkins for educational purposes. Round Castle is a remarkable clump of trees. The Duke of Marlborough is lord of the manor and owner of nearly all the land in this parish. The soil is clay and gravel; subsoil, clay and stone brash. The area is 1,061 acres; rateable value £1,318; the population in 1881 was 333. The hamlet of HENSINGTON adjoins Woodstock and contains the workhouse. The rateable value of Hensington is £1,453; population in 1,881 was 280.

BLENHEIM, formerly extra-parochial, is now a parish within the parliamentary borough of Woodstock, in Woodstock union and county court district, adjoining Woodstock on the south, 2 miles from the Handborough station on the Oxford and Worcester railway, and 2 miles from Woodstock road station on the Oxford and Birmingham railway. Here is BLENHEIM PALACE, the seat of the Dukes of Marlborough. While residing here, Alfred the Great translated Boëthius; and several statutes were enacted by a Parliament summoned here by Ethelred. The palace was rebuilt by Henry I. who, stocking the park, anciently known as Woodstock, with deer and other animals, enclosed it with a stone wall: this, according to Rouse, the historian, was the first enclosed park in England; it was also the favourite residence of Henry II. who erected a bower in the woods, concealing it by means of a labyrinth, for his mistress Fair Rosamond, who was the daughter of Walter Lord Clifford, of Clifford Castle in Herefordshire, and who died in 1177; remains of the bower were to be seen in 1622, and her name is still given to a well from which flows a copious stream of the purest water. Henry VIII. made considerable additions to the palace; and the gatehouse, which contained the room known as Queen Elizabeth's chamber (from the circumstance of that princess having been confined there by her sister Queen Mary) had an inscription upon it describing Henry VIII. as being its founder. The manor of Woodstock continued in the hands of the Crown until the reign of Queen Anne, who granted it to the Duke of Marlborough and his heirs for ever, the terms of the grant being that the Duke or his successors shall present to the reigning sovereign a standard of France on the 13th of August, being the anniversary of the famous victory that was gained over the French and Bavarians in 1704, at the battle of Hochstet, near the village of Blenheim or Blindheim, on the banks of the Danube; and a flag bearing three fleurs-de-lis is accordingly presented every year and deposited in the Guard Room of Windsor Castle. This grant was confirmed by an Act of Parliament passed on the 14th March, 1705, bestowing on the Duke the sum of £500,000 for the erection of the palace, the building of which was begun June 18th, 1705, and had not concluded on the death of the Duke in 1722; it occupies an elevated site, sufficiently raised to display in an admirable manner the varied characteristics of the structure, without either lessening its apparent extent or depriving it of any of its stateliness. The whole fabric is constructed of freestone, and consists of a grand central block, with wings united to it by colonnades, proceeding from massive square towers at the extremities of the principal front, thus forming three sides of a great court entered from between the wings by a fine arch: the whole palace was erected from the designs of Sir John Vanbrugh, an architect and dramatist, and is considered by many to be his masterpiece: the extreme length of the whole building is 850 feet, the chief or north front extending 348 feet from wing to wing, and the south front, consisting of five divisions being also 348 feet in length, while the entire area of the buildings is not less than seven acres: the principal front exhibits in a remarkable degree the fertility of design possessed by the architect, the horizontal lines of the elevation being skilfully broken up by an exuberant and sometimes fanciful variety of ornamental features; directly in the centre rises a majestic portico with six pillars of the Corinthian order, supporting a pediment adorned with the armorial insignia of the first Duke, surrounded by emblematic accessories, on the apex of which is a statue of Minerva: in rear of the portico extends on either side central portions of the palace, lighted by two ranges of spacious windows divided by pilasters, supporting a frieze and balustrading, surmounted by statues; thence the front expands on both sides in a curve, consisting of buildings of two stories, arcaded with Doric pilasters and terminating in the upper stage with a balustrade, and these are flanked in turn by the rusticated towered structures already noticed, and a terrace projecting from each tower, connects the lateral divisions of the edifice with the centre: in the eastern and western angles of the mansion are observatories, furnished with suitable apparatus, by Ramsden; the approach through the triumphal arch at Woodstock is one of great magnificence, displaying the mansion in all its architectural splendour, whilst the lake and the bridge over it combine with the outline of the hills in the background to produce a scene of striking and unrivalled beauty; this arch was reared by Sarah, 1st Duchess of Marlborough, and is a structure of the Corinthian order, containing a porter's lodge, and has on two sides Latin and English inscriptions recording its erection; an avenue of two miles long forms the approach to the grand front from the Ditchley gate; this road passes the Column of Victory, a monumental pillar of the Doric order, 130 feet high, surmounted by a statue of the Duke of Marlborough, habited in classic costume, with a baton in the left hand, and an emblem of Victory in the right; on the four sides of the pedestal are inscriptions detailing his services and the various grants and Acts of Parliament which have been made in his favour: from this column rows of stately trees, first describing an open square to the east and west, converge towards the rear, and form a prolonged and delightful vista, terminated by the lake, the grand bridge, and the buildings of the palace: the great hall, entered from the portico on the principal front, is 67 feet high, and has a lofty ceiling, supported by fluted Corinthian columns, and painted by Sir James Thornhill, with a representation of Victory pointing to a plan of the battle of Blenheim and crowning the Duke of Marlborough, who is in Roman costume: the arcades on either side of hall are adorned with marble termini, and around are disposed fine antique and modern statues, with a clock by Des Granges and a wind dial in bronze; the doors are secured by a unique and singular lock, copied from one on the former gates of Warsaw; there are also here a number of portraits and various paintings by old masters. The grand cabinet is a magnificent apartment opening to the east and south, and is enriched with a series of priceless pictures by Rubens, Teniers, Rembrandt, Carlo Dolci, Ruysdell and others; the small drawing room has grand cabinet richly inlaid, and a table formerly belonging to Marie Antoinette, with paintings by Raphael, Carracci, Titian, Canaletti and Reynolds; the large drawing room has a superb alto-relievo over the chimney piece, copied from the antique, and representing the marriage of Cupid and Psyche, the walls are hung with examples of Rembrandt, Vandyck, Mytens and Reynolds; in the dining room are twenty-three other superb paintings, twelve of which are by Rubens; the saloon, occupying the entire breadth of the central portion of the palace, forms a parallelogram, and has an oval ceiling, painted by La Guerre; the drawing rooms contain tapestry representing the military achievements of the great Duke, including the battles of Dunnewert, July 3rd, 1704; Lisle, December 9th, 1708; Malplaquet, September 11th, 1709; Bouthain, September 13th, 1711; and Oudenarde July 11th, 1708; paintings by Ricci and others; the original vote of thanks to the Duke from the House of Lords, his famous dispatch to the Queen from the field of Blenheim, a superb collection of enamels and miniatures, and a fine copy of the celebrated Portland Vase. The library, originally intended for a picture gallery, and occupying the entire south-west front, is 184 feet in length, with a central width of 31ft. 9in., and contains busts of Charles, Earl of Sunderland, who collected the library known by his name, and Charles Spencer, Duke of Marlborough, by Rysbrach; at the upper end of the chamber is a marble statue of Queen Anne in her coronation robes, also by Rysbrach, and said to have cost 5,000 guineas; at the lower end is a marble bust of John, Duke of Marlborough, in plate armour: a fine telescope, presented to George Spencer, third Duke, by George III, is also placed here, and on the walls are portraits by Sir Godfrey Kneller. The famous Sunderland library, which until lately occupied this apartment, was collected during the years 1710-23, by Charles, 3rd Earl of Sunderland, and was sold by auction by Messrs. Puttick and Simpson, London, in three sections, commencing December 1st, 1881. The palace also contains an extremely fine and valuable collection of MSS. including letters and autographs, several Royal Charters, documents relating to the Civil War: Hare's MS. journal of the campaigns of the Duke of Marlborough, and an immense collection of letters and papers constituting the transactions of the Duke with innumerable personages at home and abroad, together with the correspondence of Queen Anne with the Duchess, and many autograph letters to the latter from eminent literary men. The chapel situated in the west wing, is approached by a piazza; the most interesting feature of its grand interior is the superb marble monument to the Duke of Marlborough and his two sons, which occupies nearly the whole of one side of the chapel, and was erected by the Duchess in 1733, who, at her death in 1744, was also commemorated upon it; the monument includes colossal statues of the Duke and Duchess and their two sons, attended by Fame and History; on the base is a basso-relievo representing the capture of Marshal Tallard at the battle of Blenheim; in a vault in this chapel, are deposited the remains of the Duke, who died at Windsor, June 16th, 1722; and was interred on August 9th, in Westminster Abbey, but on the death of the Duchess, October 18th, 1744 his body was removed here: beside the first Duke and Duchess, there were also buried in the same vault, the Marquis of Blandford (Godolphin), the first Duke and Duchess of the Spencer family, the third Duke and Duchess, their eldest daughter (Viscountess Clifden), and others of the family; the fine alabaster pulpit was erected by John Winston, 6th Duke. Among the former treasures of Blenheim was a unique collection of mythological paintings on leather, generally attributed to Titian, but assigned by other authorities to Alessandro Varolari; after remaining on view from 1788 to 1861, the whole series, together with Rubens' "Rape of Proserpine," a magnificent work, 8ft. 8in. in height, was unfortunately destroyed by fire, February 5th, 1861. The china gallery contains some antique specimens of porcelain. The gardens, covering a space of 300 acres, are disposed around the south, east, and west fronts, descending on the west side to the lake; and were laid out by Mr. Wise in 1704, and subsequently improved and enlarged by Mr. Lancelot ("Capability") Brown; they include an Italian Garden, with an extensive conservatory; private gardens, in which is situated the porcelain house, and a rustic temple, a rosary, and an American garden: descending hence into the valley, the Grand Cascade is approached, the waters of which falling down a rugged declivity are discharged into the Evenlode; near the Cascade, and flowing from the mouths of lions into an antique basin, is a perennial spring, known as "Fair Rosamond's well." The lake, designed by Brown, covers a space of 250 acres, and in the centre is a grand bridge, consisting of one centre arch of 101 feet span, and two small side arches, with rusticated abutments, having chambers within, accessible from the lake; the lake is formed by the river Glyme, which runs into the Evenlode, a feeder of the Isis: near the grand bridge is Queen Elizabeth's Island, placed in the centre of the stream, and connected with the banks by rustic bridges on either side; on the west side of the lake, is the site, marked by two sycamore trees, of the ancient palace of Woodstock, in which Queen Elizabeth had once been a prisoner, and the scene of many historic events; at the foot of the hill is the grand fountain, a copy of the last work of the celebrated Bernini in the Piazza Novona, at Rome, executed for Pope Innocent XI; with a central obelisk bearing an inscription, and symbolical figures representing the rivers Danube, Nile, La Plata, and Ganges; in the rock gardens, ruggedly picturesque with their moss-grown boulders and grottoes, are cultivated many rare Alpine plants; the kitchen gardens are 12 acres in extent, and there is an arboretum, enclosing a small lake, in which various aquatic plants are grown; and an aviary stocked with gold and silver pheasants, doves and columidæ generally; in the private gardens is an enclosure of about 7 acres, devoted to the maintenance of emus and kangaroos; and in different parts of the grounds are two temples, dedicated respectively to Diana and Hebe; the former, designed by Sir William Chambers, is of the Ionic order; the latter, erected to commemorate the restoration to health of George III, is Corinthian; south-west of the palace is High Lodge, an ancient battlemented pile, with a tall oriel, and once the residence of the ranger of Woodstock Park; the notorious John Wilmot, Earl of Rochester, who was ranger in the reign of Charles II. died here July 26th, 1680, and was buried at Spelsbury. The park contains 2,700 acres and extends into the parish of Bladon, its entire circuit being not less than 10 miles; it is divided into two portions, the Great or High Park and the Home or Little Park, and is well stocked with deer and interspersed with much venerable timber; the palace and gardens are open to the public every day in the week, except Saturday; (the former from 11 till 1, and the latter from 11 till 2) from March to September, a charge of 1s. being made for tickets, the proceeds of which are given to the Radcliffe Infirmary, Oxford: the Duke of Marlborough K.G. is lord of the manor and sole landowner. The soil is light; subsoil, stone brash. The land is partly arable, but chiefly composes the magnificent park attached to the palace. The area is 2,370 acres; rateable value, £2,429; the population in 1881 was 122.

BLETCHINGDON is a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Islip, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 8 miles north from Oxford and 7 south-west from Bicester. Kirtlington station on the Oxford and Birmingham branch of the Great Western railway, is situated at Gibraltar, in this parish, about 1½ miles from the village. The river Cherwell and the Oxford canal pass through the parish. The church of St. Giles, situated in Bletchingdon Park, is a stone building mainly in the Perpendicular style, and consisting of chancel nave, north aisle, south porch and a low western tower with a square turret, surmounted by a pyramidal roof with vane; the pulpit and open seats are of the time of James I. and the porch dates from 1695; the church was restored in 1878, when a north aisle was added; in the chancel are several monuments to the Coghill family, and a memorial to Dr. John Mill, editor of the Greek testament; the stained east window and the reredos are memorials to the Rev. T. Dand, a former rector; in the south wall of the nave is a stained window to the memory of Arthur, 10th Viscount Valentia, erected in 1863 by his only surviving son the Hon. Sidney Annesley. The register dates from the year 1559. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £400 with residence and 200 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Provost and fellows of Queen's College, Oxford, and held since 1868 by the Rev. George Orange Balleine M.A. formerly fellow and tutor of that college. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. In 1620 Leonard Power bequeathed £200 towards the maintenance of four almshouses and a school-house, formerly built by him in Bletchingdon; these buildings were pulled down some years ago and the present almshouses erected; the income arising from the bequest of Leonard Power and the poor's land of 33 acres, together with 12 cottages, is about £80 yearly, of which about £33 is applied to the maintenance of the almshouses, £18 to education and £28 for distribution in fuel; a sum of upwards of £322 is also placed in the savings bank. At Gibraltar, or Enslow, there is a wharf on the Birmingham and Oxford canal. Bletchingdon Park, the seat of Viscount Valentia, includes a noble stone mansion in the Italian style, standing on an eminence in the park, which is about 70 acres in extent, well wooded and commanding extensive and agreeable views. Viscount Valentia is lord of the manor and chief landowner. The soil is clay, stone brash and gravel; subsoil, the same. The crops are barley, wheat, roots and a large portion pasture. The area is 2,540 acres; rateable value, £4,193; the population in 1881 was 602.

BLOXHAM is a parish in the hundred of Bloxham, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 3 miles south-west from Banbury and 21 north-west from Oxford, situated on gently rising ground and is watered by a brook, a tributary of the river Cherwell, which divides the village into two parts, and is on the road from Banbury to Chipping Norton. The construction of the Banbury and Cheltenham direct railway passing through this parish, is now completed, but the line has not yet been opened: there will be a station here. The church of St. Mary, thoroughly restored in 1866 by the late G. E. Street esq. R.A. seems to have been founded in the twelfth century, as fragments of that date are found re-used in it; in the thirteenth century the nave and aisles, with arcades of four arches were built, and a north transept added, the chancel being at the same time rebuilt and the old work introduced into it: the tower is of the fourteenth century with a rich Decorated west doorway; the spire appears to be of a later period, but the transition from the square tower to the octagonal spire being very skilfully contrived; the belfry stage has at each angle a lofty pinnacle rising above the base of the spire which attains a height of 195 feet and is a conspicuous object for many miles round; in the fifteenth century the clerestory was added and an elaborate chapel with four large Perpendicular windows and an open timber roof built on the south side to the east of the porch: the windows of the chancel, dating from the fourteenth century, are unique for the singular way in which carved ornament peculiar to the twelfth century has been worked up in the mouldings and other details, as is also the case in the doorway of the south porch; this has a groined roof above which are two rooms, the former dwelling of the parish priest; the north porch is of singular beauty and has a very handsome and curious roof, which, though entirely new, is an exact copy of the original roof, a portion of which was discovered during the restoration; the west door is adorned with a sculptured representation of the Last Judgment, wrought on the wall above and on each side of the door arch: in the centre is Our Lord, on either side the Apostles and beyond them, on the right of Our Lord, the Resurrection, and on His left the Pains of Hell, while on either side are angels holding instruments of the Passion: the west window of the north aisle has a large cross introduced in its tracery and on the centre of this is sculptured the head of Our Lord, whilst at the ends of the arms are the four evangelistical symbols; between the north aisle and north transept is a clustered column of the fourteenth century with a singularly sculptured capital, consisting of heads and half-length figures; the chancel and nave roofs are entirely new and were constructed from the designs of the late G. E. Street esq. R.A.; the north and south aisles and transept roofs are to a great extent reproductions of the roof previously existing; the old rood-screen remains and has been thoroughly restored and re-painted; a new screen separates the south aisle from the Milcombe chapel, which has been fitted up for weekday services and for a choir vestry, and the ancient altar discovered here has been carefully restored; the font is octagonal with traceried panels, buttresses and pinnacles: the reredos is a beautiful work of alabaster, marble and stone, containing in the midst a sculpture of the Crucifixion; the piscina and sedilia have been restored from traces of the old work; there are vestiges of three frescos, depicting Hell, St. Christopher and Our Lord before Pilate; and there also exist a few fragments of old painted glass; the stall work of the chancel, all of English oak, beautifully wrought and carved, and the nave and aisle benches are all new: the pulpit is of Caen stone, beautifully carved; numerous fragments of ancient tiles were found and by careful study the patterns were recovered and have been reproduced in the new flooring; the organ, which formerly occupied a western gallery, was originally erected in 1850 by public subscription, at a cost of £300: it has been greatly enlarged at an additional cost of £300 and is now placed in a chamber built on the north of the chancel; the whole restoration cost about £6,000. The Bloxham registers date from the year 1630, but that of Milcombe, included therein, from 1562. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £270 with residence and 171 acres of glebe, let for £355, in the gift of Eton College and held since 1852 by the Rev. James Hodgson M.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge. The vicarage house was rebuilt in 1858 from designs by the late G. E. Street esq. R.A. There are Wesleyan and Baptist chapels, the latter built in 1859. The charities of Bloxham are very extensive; they consist of an estate of 131 acres, vested in 16 feoffees, the annual gross income of which is about £350, and after deducting the necessary outlay on the estate and such costs of management as are required, the remainder is divided, by a decree of the court of Chancery of 1604, into three shares, one of which is distributed to the poor, a second allotted to the repairs of the parish church and bridges leading thereto, and the third to the common Town Charges Fund, such as paving the village and other necessary uses; the shares vary from £85 to £100 each, according to the annual expenditure required on the estate. Huggins' and Hall's charities provide about £4 a year for fuel and bread. Bloxham Grove is the residence of the Rev. George Warriner M.A.; in its vicinity several Roman coins of "Antoninus Pius," in good preservation, were dug up in 1840. The Ven. Lord Saye and Sele is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are the Rev. George Warriner M.A. and Eton College. The soil is rich, composed of red and sandy loam, fine arable and pasture land; the crops of the usual kind. BODICOTE is an ecclesiastical parish, formed in 1855 out of the mother parish of Adderbury, in the hundred of Bloxham, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 2 miles south from Banbury and 21 north from Oxford. The church of St. John the Baptist is a stone structure of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries and is chiefly Decorated and consists of a chancel, nave, aisles and a tower on the north side, containing 6 bells: over the east window is a modern sculpture of a crucifix with figures of the Virgin and St. John on either side: in 1844 it underwent very considerable repairs; in the chancel is a memorial window to George Warriner esq. who died December 30th, 1845; the rood loft remains perfect. The register of baptisms and marriages dates from the year 1563 and burials 1567. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £274 with residence and 12 acres of glebe, in the gift of New College, Oxford and held since 1873 by the Rev. Ambrose Short M.A. late fellow of that college. The Baptists have a chapel built in 1818 and the Wesleyans have also a chapel here. The village cross was standing until the early part of the present century. Bodicote Grange is the residence of Bernhard Samuelson esq. M.P., F.R.S. and Bodicote house that of Edward Wm. Tritton esq. J.P. George Bliss esq. is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are Holford C. Risley, Edward Cardwell, Edward William Tritton J.P. esqs. and New College, Oxford. Rhubarb for medical purposes is cultivated here: the plant was first introduced into the neighbourhood of Banbury about the year 1777 by Dr. William Hayward, an apothecary of that place, who died in 1811, and the plants were then purchased by Mr. P. Usher, whose family now cultivate the plant very extensively; henbane is also grown: and the other crops are of the usual kind. The area is 1,680 acres; rateable value, £4,189; the population in 1881 was 687.

BLACK BOURTON (or BOURTON ABBOTS), is a parish and village, 2 miles north-west from Bampton, 7½ south-west from Witney, three-quarters of a mile from Alvescot station and 73 miles from London, in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Mary is an ancient structure of mixed styles, chiefly Transition Norman, consisting of chancel with north chapel, nave, north aisle and western embattled tower of late Perpendicular date, introduced within the south-west angle and containing 5 bells: the chancel is Early English, with three small lancets at the east end, a piscina and locker and a sedile formed by the sill of a window; beneath the communion table is a marble slab to Sir Arthur Hopton, knight, ambassador to the court of Spain in the reign of Charles I. ob. 1649, and in the north chapel is a stone monument with recumbent figure to Lady Eleanor Hungerford, ob. 1591: it was completely restored in 1866. The register dates from the year 1542. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £350 with residence, in the gift of Christ Church, Oxford, and held since 1874 by the Rev. William Price M.A. of Christ Church, now acting chaplain at Memel; the Rev. William Edward Glascott M.A. of Trinity college, Dublin, has been curate-in-charge since 1881. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, who are lords of the manor, and the Duke of Marlborough are the principal landowners. The whole of this parish formerly belonged to the Wiltshire family of Hungerford. Maria Edgeworth, the novelist (1767-1849), is said to have been born at the mansion which formerly existed here, then the property of the Elers family, from which she was descended on the mother's side; other accounts, however, fix her birth-place at the Hare Hutch, in Berks. The soil is stone brash and gravel; subsoil, the same. The land is principally arable. The area is 2,258 acres; rateable value £2,559; the population in 1881 was 212.

BRITWELL PRIOR is a village in the civil parish of Newington, hundred of Ewelme, union of Henley, county court district of Wallingford, rural deanery of Aston and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, one mile and a half south-west from Watlington and 6 miles north-east from Wallingford. The church, a small edifice, with some good Norman features, including the chancel arch and south doorway, was taken down in the year 1865 and the parishioners now attend that of Britwell Salome, the adjoining parish: the old church had 1 bell, an octagonal font and a brass to Richard Crook, sen. 1549, with Latin and English verses and Richard Crook, jun. placed here by Robert Hallei. The living was formerly a chapelry of the parish of Newington, but by an Order in Council was in 1867 annexed to the rectory of Britwell Salome, joint gross yearly value about £285, in the gift of the Marquis of Lansdowne, and held since 1851 by the Rev. James Thomas Johnson M.A. of St. John's College, Oxford, who resides at Britwell Salome. Chibnall's charity of £1 16s. a year is distributed in money; the church acre produces 10s. yearly for repairs. This place is said to have been the scene of an encounter during the civil war, in which Hampden took part; many military remains have been found. Britwell House, the seat of John Smith esq. J.P. is very pleasantly situated in a prettily-wooded park: in the grounds facing the house is a monument erected in 1764 to a member of the Simeon family: in the early part of the present century the mansion was the residence of about twenty-five nuns of the order of St. Clare, who took refuge here from the violence of the French revolution. Mrs. Norton, who is lady of the manor, Messrs. Paine and John Smith esq. J.P. are the principal landowners. The soil is loam; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, oats, barley, beans and roots. The area is 699 acres; rateable value £880; the population in 1881 was 50.

BRIZE NORTON is a parish and long straggling village in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 3½ miles south-east from Burford, 3 north from Bampton and 4 south-west from Witney, on the road from Bampton to Burford. The Bampton station of the Oxford, Witney and Fairford line is in this parish. The church of St. Brize or Brice is an ancient structure of mixed styles, consisting of chancel with north aisle, nave, north aisle, south porch, vestry and a western tower of Early English date containing 5 bells: the nave is in part Early English and partly Decorated, the north aisle being of the latter period: the chancel, also of this date, contains three sedilia, an aumbry and an interesting Decorated piscina; an ancient screen, restored in 1881, separates the chancel from the nave: there is a fine Norman south doorway, also a font of the same character, with attached shafts: the vestry contains the very beautiful tomb of John Daubigny, the central portion of the tomb consists of a slightly raised slab on which are carved in relief the helm, mantling and shield of the knight, above this in a trefoiled opening appear the head and shoulders of a knightly effigy and below, in a similar opening, the crossed feet, resting on a lion; around are four shields and a marginal inscription, dated 1346: in the chancel is a mural tablet to Eleanor Woodd, 1664, widow of Basil Woodd who was slain at Preston, in the Scottish invasion of 1648: there are also floor stones to the Greenwood family, formerly of the Manor house: the church was restored in 1868; the bells were rehung and an organ introduced in 1881. The register dates from the year 1579. The living is a discharged vicarage, gross yearly value £300 with residence, in the gift of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford, and held since 1878 by the Rev. Wm. Edmunds Ivens M.A. of Worcester Coll. Oxford. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. An annuity of £5 was left by Goddard Carter, in 1723, for the education of poor children and there is an annual charity of about 9s. for poor widows. The Manor House is occupied by Mr. John Worley. The principal landowners are the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, who are also lords of the manor, Edward Morley esq. and the Messrs. Gillett. The soil is stone brash and clay; subsoil, soft stone and clay. The chief crops are the usual cereals. The area is 3,140 acres; rateable value, £4,355; the population in 1881 was 639.

BROUGHTON is a parish and village in the hundred of Bloxham, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 2½ miles south-west from Banbury and 23 north-west from Oxford, situated on the Sorbrook, a tributary of the Cherwell. The church of St. Mary is a very interesting structure in the Decorated style of the fourteenth century, consisting of chancel, nave, with clerestory, a wide south aisle also with clerestory, south porch and a western tower with broach spire containing 1 bell: the chancel, restored by the late Sir G. Gilbert Scott R.A. has a fine stained east window, and a memorial window on the south side to the Rev. G. M. Nelson B.D. 1859, where are also three elegant Decorated sedilia and a piscina; and westward of these a fine Perpendicular altar tomb, with recumbent alabaster figures of a knight and lady, partially restored; these represent Sir Thomas and Lady Wykeham, great nephew and niece of William of Wykeham, whose heiress, Margaret, married Lord Saye and Sele, slain at Barnet in 1471: the lofty panelling of the destroyed canopy is nearly perfect; between this tomb and the chancel screen is an altar tomb of Derbyshire marble with shields and highly-wrought scroll-work to William, Viscount Saye and Sele, 1622, an adherent of the Parliament in the civil war, and Elizabeth, his wife, 1648; the upper slab, of fine black marble, is incised with arms and inscriptions, and on the spandril of the arch above is the shield of Fiennes, with helmet and suspended gauntlets; there are floor stones to Lawrence, Viscount Saye and Sele, 1742. Dorothy Cecil, daughter of Edward, Viscount Wimbledon 1652; Mary, wife of Richard Fiennes esq. 1666, with shields and marginal inscription on brass, with other members of the family to 1733: a very fine stone screen of Decorated work divides the nave from the chancel, the lower portion of which is filled in with modern stone diapered ornament; the eagle lectern is a memorial to Col. the Hon. Yvo de Vesci T. W. Fiennes C.B. who died in 1875, and was given by the officers and men who served under him; the nave, roof and clerestory are an addition of the fifteenth century, raised upon the original walls to a considerable height, but lighted only on the north side: there is a Norman font consisting of a circular basin with cable moulding on a circular pedestal, and a carved stone pulpit, the gift of the late rector; and on the nave floor is a coffin slab with double cross: the south aisle is separated from the nave by four Early Decorated arches and contains some very fine monuments, one of which is that of Sir Thomas De Broughton, the founder of the church and castle, with his effigy, under a rich recessed arch, clad in chain mail; the spandrils of the arch bear shields, repeated in quatrefoils above: the arch is surmounted by a battlemented cresting, and the whole is highly coloured: near this is a fine canopied and recessed tomb with the quartered arms of Fiennes and a panelled ceiling with pendants, terminated upwards in a cristing and pinnacles supported by bears holding shields; above this is a Decorated memorial window to Edward Chapman Morell, Arthur Morell and Sarah Ann Chapman, placed in 1870; opposite is a panelled altar tomb, with the shields of Fiennes, Saye and Wykeham, on which has been placed the effigy of a knight of the Broughton family: at the east end is an extremely fine Decorated window, and the aisle contains mural monuments to Gregory William, eleventh baron Saye and Sele, 1844; Thomas Lord Saye and Sele, Major-General, 1788; and Lady Elizabeth, his wife, 1816; William Thomas, twelfth baron Saye and Sele, 1847; a mural brass to the Hon. Edward Twisleton M.A. 1874, and memorials to others of the Fiennes family, 1658-66; at the west end is a stained window of Munich glass, erected by Ellen Twisleton in 1862 at a cost of £400: here also are floor stones to Maria, wife of Lord Saye and Sele, 1834, and to the family of Herbert, 1791-1810, continued in the nave to 1830. The register dates from the year 1683, but is very imperfect. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £740 with residence, in the gift of and held since 1870 by the Rev. Chas. F. Wyatt M.A. of Christ Church, Oxford. Broughton Castle is the seat of the Ven. and Right Hon. Lord Saye and Sele D.C.L.; the most ancient portions are almost in thir original state; Mr. J. H. Parker remarks, "The greatest peculiarity of this part is the beautiful groined passage which leads in one direction to the chapel and in the other to the principal staircase, which, before the present staircases were made, must have been the only means of access to the solar and other principal apartments; this end also, having been the portion of the building appropriated to the state apartments, fully accounts for the richness of the groined passage: the principal parts erected in the fifteenth century (1407 Henry IV.), when the license to crenellate was obtained, must have been the walls within the moat, which originally surrounded the whole place and of which portions yet remain; the offices adjoin the gate-house, the embattled part of the building, which now contains the kitchen, the guard room and the windows of the room over the chapel; of the three different periods to which the erection of the structure may be assigned the fourteenth century (1301 to 1307) produced the work of the De Broughtons; the fifteenth (1407), that built by the Wykehams, and the sixteenth (1554), the portion added by the present family of Wykeham-Fiennes. Seen from the north-west Broughton Castle presents the appearance of a fine Elizabethan mansion; it is surrounded by a moat, crossed by a bridge of two arches, connecting the castle with a gateway tower, and other buildings of the fifteenth century, and the whole stands in an extensive park." The hall, 54 feet in length by 26 feet in width, has a ceiling with fifteen pendants: the corridor is about 90 feet in length and extends along the north front: there are apartments opening upon this gallery with richly ornamented ceilings and chimney pieces, and there are some good specimens of painted glass in the "council-room." Mr. Hampden, Mr. Pym, Mr. Oliver St. John, Sir Harry Vane the younger, with the Earl of Bedford, Lord Brooke and others met in council to oppose the arbitrary policy of King Charles I. previous to the assembling of the Long Parliament in 1641. The chapel belongs to the older part, and, though small and plain, is interesting as a domestic chapel of unusually Early date; it has a Decorated east window and an original stone altar, marked with consecration crosses. The Ven. Lord Saye and Sele D.C.L. who is lord of the manor, the Rev. Charles F. Wyatt M.A. and F. J. Morrell esq. are the principal landowners. The soil is chiefly red loam. The crops are wheat, barley, oats, beans and roots. The entire area is 926 acres; rateable value, £2,081; the entire population in 1881 was 158.

North Newington is a township in the parish of Broughton, 2½ miles west from Banbury. Here is a Congregational chapel. There is a charity of £122 annual value, bequeathed by Viscountess Saye and Sele, of which £47 is for apprenticing two poor boys, £25 for distribution amongst the poor. The Venerable Lord Saye and Sele D.C.L. who is lord of the manor, Colonel North M.P. Rev. Charles F. Wyatt M.A. and David Renton esq. are the principal landowners. The area is 1,043 acres; rateable value, £1,968; the population in 1881 was 418.

BUCKNELL is a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 3 miles north-west from Bicester and 14 north-east from Oxford. The church of St. Peter is a structure of mixed styles, chiefly of the thirteenth century and consists of chancel and nave, with a central battlemented tower containing 3 bells; the chancel is good Early English, with lancet windows, and has north and south doors: there are here two brasses let into the same stone, one with shield of arms and inscription to Edward Ewre esq. 1638, Frances (Poure), his wife, and six children; and the other to Francis, eldest son of preceding, and Jane (Savage), his wife; a third brass is recorded to Richard Bennett, forty years parson here, 1591; the nave is also Early English, but has a clerestory and roof, added in the fifteenth century; the tower is plain Early Norman, with a Perpendicular upper story, and a circular turret; the font is octagonal; pulpit, Elizabethan, of carved oak, with pilasters of the Ionic order, there are various mural and other monuments to the family of Trotman, 1599-1775: the windows were formerly filled with stained glass, including invocatory inscriptions and arms. The register dates from the year 1700. The living is a rectory, yearly value, from 362 acres of glebe, £300 with residence, in the gift of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford and held since 1879 by the Rev. Edward Miller M.A. formerly fellow and tutor of that college. The charities consist of the interest of £300 in the £3 per Cents. bequeathed by Dr. Gauntlet and received annually from New College, Oxford; also 50s. paid by the proprietor as the interest of a Trotman bequest of £40 charged on land; these sums are distributed in clothing. On the south side of the parish stands Bucknell House, the residence of Col. Frederick Drummond Hibbert J.P. who is the chief landed proprietor and lord of the manor, in right of his wife, daughter and co-heiress of the late Fiennes Trotman esq. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, stone. The land is chiefly arable. The area is 1,670 acres; rateable value, £2,253; the population in 1881 was 264.

BURFORD (A.S. BEORGFORDA), "the hill ford," is a township, parish and market town and polling place for the county, in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situated at the western extremity of the county, on the borders of Gloucestershire, 5 miles south from Shipton station, 8 north-west from Bampton station, 9 north from Lechlade, 7 west from Witney, 11 north from Faringdon, 22 from Cheltenham, 18 west-by-north from Oxford, 72 from London by the road through High Wycombe and 76 through Henley-on-Thames; the town, situated on an ascent facing south on the banks of the river Windrush, consists of three streets, the principal being High street, intersected by Sheep street and Witney street; it is lighted with gas and has an excellent supply of water: the bridge over the Windrush was built in 1416, by John Howchum and Geoffrey Barbour, under the patronage of Henry V. Excellent views of the surrounding country can be obtained from the hills which skirt the town, which gives the title of Earl (1676) to the Duke of St. Albans. The earliest mention of this place seems to be in the Saxon Chronicle, which under the date A.D. 752, records a battle fought at "Beorg-forda," between Cuthred, king of the West Saxons and Ethelbald, king of Mercia; the scene of the conflict was at a spot about half a mile west of the town and between it and Upton, and is still called "Battle Edge." At the time of the Conquest it was held by Earl Alberic and at a later period Henry II. granted to the town all the privileges possessed by the city of Oxford. In the parliament of 1306 (34 Edward I.), the borough of Burford was represented by Thomas de Lincoln, but on petition, the inhabitants were relieved from any further representation; the ancient corporate body, which consisted of two bailiffs and ten burgesses, continued to exist until a recent period, but eventually became extinct in December, 1859, when the management of the local charities and of the Grammar school was transferred to the Charity Commissioners; sixteen charters, the originals of which are still preserved, have been from time to time granted to the town. During the Civil War, an encounter took place here in 1649, between the Royalists and the Parliamentary forces under Fairfax, in which the former were worsted and lost 1,400 as prisoners. The town was visited by Queen Elizabeth, August 3rd, 1574; in 1645 by Charles I.; and in the years 1681, 1687 and 1695 respectively by Charles II., James II. and William III. The church of St. John the Baptist is a fine but singularly arranged cruciform structure, originally Norman, but now chiefly of the Perpendicular period, consisting of chancel with Tanfield chapel and vestry on the north and Bartholomew chapel on the south side, clerestoried nave, aisles, north transept, or Pinnock's chapel, and south transept, or Leggare's chapel, and a lofty central tower, of Norman date, with a graceful spire and containing a clock and 6 bells, dating from 1635; the tower with the exception of the belfry story and spire, is rich Late Norman and the interior stages above the main arches exhibit some fine arcading, pierced with windows on the north and south sides: the belfry story is of Early fifteenth century work and terminates in a panelled parapet with south-west turret and crocketed pinnacles at each angle; the spire is Perpendicular: the original tower arches leading to the transepts have disappeared; the present arches are of sixteenth century work reared on the Norman bases: the chancel about 46 feet long by 21 wide, has a locker and aumbry on the north and piscina and sedilia on the south side: the late Perpendicular east window of five lights retains some ancient stained glass in the tracery and is flanked by the remains of two large canopied niches; on the south side is an arcade of two arches on piers, with clustered shafts, and on the north side a large debased arch without pillars: above the communion table is a fine painting of the Adoration: and on the floor of the sacrarium a stone inscribed to John Prior, gentleman, murdered in 1697: the vestry on the north side is Early Perpendicular with a vaulted roof; an ancient stone altar and a piscina with four holes and shelf; on the same side, separated by an oak screen, is the Tanfield chapel, in the north-east corner is a coloured niche, recently discovered and in the adjoining wall are pegs to which were attached votive offerings; in the south-east corner is a large hagioscope; in this chapel is an altar tomb of marble with recumbent effigy of Sir Lawrence Tanfield, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, ob. 1625, beneath an arched canopy supported on pillows with numerous figures, inscriptions in Latin and English, shields &c. the whole being richly coloured: separated from the chancel by a fine oak screen on the south side, is the Bartholomew chapel containing numerous altar tombs of stone and marble mural monuments to the Bartholomew family, mostly of the seventeenth century; it is now used as an organ chamber: the Perpendicular nave is separated from its aisles by arcades of five arches on either side, on clustered piers: the west window of five lights retains some fragments of ancient stained glass; beneath it is a good Norman doorway with beakhead and chevron mouldings and twisted shafts; at the east end, above the tower arch is a fine life-sized modern painting of the Crucifixion: the roof is of oak, with carved supports resting on stone corbels: the north aisle contains the font, a Perpendicular work, circular in shape, with crocketed niches, containing a representation of the Crucifixion and other subjects, cut in the lead lining is the inscription "Anthony Sedley, prisoner, 1649;" at the west end is a stone bench and an aumbry; here is also a massive mural monument of classical design, with effigies and quartered arms to Edmund Harman esq. ob. 1569, his wife Agnes and 16 children; under the most easterly arch is an ancient chantry chapel with an altar and an illuminated reredos with niches containing modern figures; the screen and roof are of carved oak, also coloured: the south aisle, 70 feet long by 10 wide, is open for its entire length to the south porch and two adjacent chapels: St. Thomas' chapel, between the south porch and transept and now called "Burgesses' Aisle," is separated from the aisle by an arcade of two arches and an oak screen and retains an arcading, a piscina and a handsome bracket; on the east side is a large blocked arch; on the west wall is a mural tablet with effigy, to John Harris, a native of this place and and afterwards alderman of Oxford, ob. 1674; beneath the chapel are the remains of a crypt: the adjoining south porch is a lofty and beautiful specimen of the late Perpendicular style, with a richly panelled front, enclosing three large niches, with crocketed and pinnacled canopies containing mutilated figures, the lower stage has a vaulted roof with fan tracery; above are two rooms or parvises, now used as muniment chambers: adjoining the porch on the west and separated from the south aisle (beyond which it extends westward about 30 feet) by an arcade of three arches, is the Silvester chapel, so called from the numerous altar tombs and mural monuments it contains to the Silvester family, dating from the sixteenth century to the present time, with a turret at the west end leading to the roof; it retains an altar tomb with a shield of arms; there is also a mural monument with brass to John Osbaldeston, gentleman, of Chadlington, 1614 and Grace (Ashfield) his wife, 1611, with children: the south transept, or Leggare's chapel, has on the east side a remarkable feathered arch, now blocked, within which is a small window and a piscina; there are also several niches; the large south window is Early Perpendicular and has inscribed on its interior arch — "Orase"(? orate)"pro animabus et matris Johannis Leggare de Borford per quem ista fenestra decoretur"; and within the chapel is an altar tomb of stone and gray marble to this John Leggare, with niches enclosing kneeling figures of angels bearing shields; the brasses formerly on the upper slab are now lost; here also is a mural tablet to Christopher Kempster, ob. 1715, who assisted in building the cathedral and dome of St. Paul's, his wife and numerous descendants; the roofs of this chapel and the north transept are both of carved oak, resting on sculptured stone corbels: on the floor at the east end of the nave, is an interesting brass with kneeling effigies to John Spicer and Alice his wife, 1437, with marginal inscription and English verses: the nave, Silvester chapel and Chantry chapel were restored in 1870-72, under the superintendence of the late G. E. Street esq. R.A. at a cost of £2,600, and the chancel, tower and Tanfield chapel in 1877, the former by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners at a cost of £781 and the two latter by subscription at a cost of £1,303. The churchyard contains several altar tombs, one of which opposite the south porch, has a brass inscribed to John Hunt, 1603, placed by his sons William and Richard in 1609. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1612; marriages, 1613. The living is a vicarage with the chapelry of Fulbrook annexed, joint net yearly value £234 with residence and 281 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1871 by the Rev. William Anthony Cass; the vicarage house bears date 1672. The Baptist chapel, built in 1700, is in Witney street; the Wesleyan chapel, a good building with stone front, is in High street; both chapels have attached burial grounds. The Grammar school, founded in 1571 by Simon Wisdom, alderman, who endowed it with the rent of certain lands and several houses in the town, for the maintenance of a master and usher; in 1876 the foundation was remodelled by the Charity Commissioners, under the Endowed Schools Act and is now controlled according to the new scheme by a body of eleven governors; the head master receives boarders in his house;

the school buildings are of the Late Perpendicular period and chiefly consists of a large rectangular gabled structure, pierced by two rows of square mullioned windows, and a smaller block at right angles to it. There are eight almshouses founded by Richard Nevill, Earl of Warwick, in 1457 and rebuilt in 1828, and various minor charitable bequests; the total amount for distribution in kind and money is about £93 yearly; education, £199; apprenticing, £52; church purposes, £47; and other purposes, about £7 yearly; by an order of the Charity Commissioners, dated 1876, the charities are distributed by a body of 12 trustees. The hamlets of Upton and Signet have a poor allotment producing about £7 yearly for fuel. The Cottage Hospital, established 1868, is situated in Church street and will accommodate eight patients. The priory of St. John the Evangelist formerly belonged to the abbey of Keynsham, Somersetshire; valued at £13 6s. 6d. and was granted 35 Henry VIII. together with the manor to Edmund Harman, who erected a mansion on the site of the ancient priory; it afterwards belonged to Sir Lawrence Tanfield kt. who rebuilt the mansion, which, descending to his grandson, Lucius Lord Falkland, was sold by him to William Lenthall, Speaker of the Long Parliament, for £7,000; the latter built the existing curious chapel, disused since 1799; the last resident was William John Lenthall esq. who lived here in 1827, but alienated the estate in 1829 to Charles Greenaway esq. whose niece, Miss Youde, is the present owner and lady of the manor; the buildings, which possess many fine Elizabethan details, are now rapidly going to decay: the grounds on the north side slope pleasantly to the river and command a view of Westhall hill, surrounded by its ancient and now deserted manor house. Among the eminent men connected with this place may be mentioned Peter Heylin D.D. a writer of some distinction in the reign of Charles I. who was born at Burford, 29th November, 1599 and educated at the Grammar school, he died in 1662; Sir William Beechey, the eminent painter, born here in 1753, became a Royal Academician in 1797 and was knighted in 1798, he died in 1839; John Wilmot, the witty but dissolute Earl of Rochester; Lucius Cary, Viscount Falkland, whose father married the daughter and heiress of Sir Lawrence Tanfield kt. was born here 1610 and subsequently slain at the first battle of Newbury, 20th September, 1643. At the corner of Sheep street stands the ancient Tolsey or Custom house, a gabled building supported on pillars with projecting windows; there are also several old houses of some interest, one of which, at the corner of Priory lane, has a fine oriel window and was once known as the Bear Inn; another, mentioned in a deed of 1590, is called "Cob-Hall," which in 1650 was an inn, called the "Swan;" an old house at the foot of the bridge bears an inscription recording its repair in 1576 and gift to the school in 1577 by Simon Wisdom, alderman. About half a mile south-west from Burford were St. Christopher's or Kitt's quarries, from which the stone for the columns, mouldings and tracery of St. Paul's Cathedral was chiefly obtained; the site is now a favourite spot for pic-nic parties. A market is held every Saturday for corn &c. and fairs are held on the last Saturday in April, July 5th and September 25th, for horses, cattle, sheep, cheese and toys. Miss Youde is the lady of the manor; the principal landowners are Mrs. Allen-Faulkner, Miss Youde, Mr. John Jacobs and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, gravel and rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. The population in 1881 was Burford, 1,312; the hamlets of Upton and Signet 248; the area of the parish is 2,753 acres; rateable value, Burford £3,174; Upton and Signet £2,812.

CADMORE END, including LEWKNOR-UP-HILL.

CADMORE END is an ecclesiastical parish formed in 1852 out of portions of the parishes of Fingest, in the county of Buckingham, and Lewknor and Stokenchurch, in the county of Oxford, chiefly in the hundred of Lewknor, union and county court district of Wycombe, rural deanery of Wycombe and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 6½ miles north-west from Wycombe. LEWKNOR-UP-HILL is a hamlet of Lewknor parish, partly in Oxfordshire and partly in Buckinghamshire; the portion in Oxfordshire forms part of the ecclesiastical parish of Cadmore End; the part in Buckinghamshire is called Ackhampstead and is given in the "Buckinghamshire Directory" under that head. The church of St. Mary-Le-More, erected in 1851, is a small building of flint with Bathstone quoins and dressings, in the Early English style, consisting of chancel, nave, vestry and a small turret containing 1 bell. The register dates from the year 1852. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £195 with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1878 by the Rev. Robert Bruce Dickson M.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge. The representatives of Sir Edward Repps Jodrell bart. are lords of the manor. The principal landowners are Major Fane, T. Taylor esq. and William Terry esq. The soil is flinty and friable sand with chalk; subsoil, gravel, chalk and clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The area is 2,034 acres; rateable value, £1,760 3s. 3d.; the population in 1882 was 263; Lewknor-up-Hill hamlet (part of) 140.

CASSINGTON is a parish and village in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Woodstock, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 2 miles east-north-east from Eynsham railway station on the Witney and Fairford railway, 4½ south from Woodstock and 6 north-west from Oxford, bounded on the south by the Isis and on the west by the Evenlode, which here flows into the Isis. The church of St. Peter is a structure of mixed styles, but principally Norman, consisting of chancel, nave, north and south porches, and a central tower with spire: the chancel has Norman walls, and a stone quoined vault; the east window of two lights is Decorated; in the east wall is a double piscina, of the same date, with shelf; the lower part of the tower is Norman, with a door on the north side and the eastern and western arches are good examples of that style; the tower has been raised one stage and has a panelled quatrefoiled parapet from within which rises the spire, octagonal and ribbed: previous to 1842 the interior walls of the tower and the timbers of the roof were covered with curious paintings of the fifteenth century, chiefly consisting of emblems of saints, with monograms; these were subsequently whitewashed over: the walls of the nave and three of the original windows are Norman, the rest being Decorated: the font is cylindrical and plain: there is a mural brass with shrouded effigy and eight verses to Thomas Nele D.D. fellow of New College and Regius Professor of Hebrew at Oxford, an able theologian and linguist, ob. 1590, and on the floor of the nave a good brass of a cross fleury with inscription to Roger Cheyne, esquire to the king 1814; in the churchyard is the base of a Perpendicular cross: the church plate includes an ancient and curious paten with embossed figures of Adam and Eve within a walled garden, and a scroll bearing a partly-rubbed-out legend; a portion of an offertory basin of the fourteenth century with figures of the spies returning laden with the grapes of Canaan is also preserved. The register dates from the year 1560. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £330 with 130 acres of glebe, in the gift of Christ Church, Oxford, and held since 1875 by the Rev. Robert Godfrey-Faussett M.A. formerly senior student and treasurer of Christ Church, who resides at St. Aldates, Oxford. The charities for distribution, chiefly in fuel, amount to about £173 yearly, and Allnutt's and Johnson's charities produce £21 a year for educational purposes. The principal landowners are the Duke of Marlborough, who is lord of the manor, and Christ Church, Oxford. The soil is gravel and clay; subsoil, clay. The chief crops are the usual cereals. The area is 2,990 acres; rateable value, £4,204; the population in 1881 was 335.

Worton is a small hamlet about half a mile north-east, consisting of a few scattered houses

CAVERSFIELD is a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, adjoining the parish of Bicester on the north and distant 10 miles south-west from Buckingham. This parish was formerly in Buckinghamshire, but by the Acts 2 & 3 William IV. cap. 64 & 7 & 8 Vict. cap. 61 it was annexed to Oxfordshire. The church of St. Lawrence is a small and ancient structure of mixed styles, thoroughly restored in 1874, when north and south aisles were added to the simple oblong building of which the church previously consisted, at the same time an organ chamber and vestry were built and the whole building new roofed; the new south aisle may be regarded as a restoration, the two Early English arches of the ancient aisle having been walled up; the tower, placed at the west end, is plain and massive with a gable roof of supposed Saxon character and contains 3 bells, one of which is said to date from A.D. 1200; the doorway and porch, placed at the north-west are late Norman, c. 1180, and there is a piscina of this date, and a Norman font ornamented with arcaded work of rude character; in the chancel is a high tomb, with richly panelled sides to John Langston esq. 1487, and there is a brass consisting of three scrolls with texts, proceeding from a heart held in a hand, with a shield of arms under it; a second brass has been concealed by a pew; there is an inscribed slab to Maximian Bond esq. 1640; in the church are some memorials of the family of Moyle. The register dates from the year 1640. The living is a vicarage, united with that of Stoke Lyne, yearly value £69, in the gift of Charles Jacob Bullock Marsham D.L., J.P. and held since 1868 by the Rev. Cloudesley Dewar Marsham M.A. of Merton College, Oxford, who resides at the vicarage, Stoke Lyne. Thomas Mansfield, of Hethe, in January 1874, paid to the official trustees of charitable funds the sum of £150, to be invested in the £3 per Cent. Consols, in trust to pay the annual dividend to the vicar of Caversfield, to be by him equally divided on the first day of February in every year among eight of the oldest deserving poor of the parish of Caversfield. Caversfield House, a modern mansion, is the seat of Charles Jacob Bullock Marsham esq. D.L., J.P. who is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are the lord of the manor, Thomas Mansfield, F. D. Hibbert and Jonas Paxton esqrs. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, stone. The land is partly pasture and partly arable. The area is 1,200 acres; rateable value, £2,023; and the population in 1881 was 140.

CAVERSHAM is a parish and large village, situated amidst picturesque scenery, on the north bank of the Thames, one mile north from Reading, with which it is connected by a bridge of 5 arches, in Binfield hundred, Henley union, Reading county court district, rural deanery of Henley and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The parish church of St. Peter, originally Norman, consists of chancel with aisle, nave, aisles and a western tower, with plain parapet containing 6 bells; it was partially restored and reseated with open benches in the year 1857, when a vestry was built and was further restored in 1879 and the tower rebuilt under the direction of Messrs. Morris and Stallwood, architects, at a cost of £3,463 7s. 1d.: the nave arcade, a portion of the original Norman church, consisted of circular arches, on plain round pillars, but the latter, it is understood, were removed during the recent alterations; there is a Norman south doorway, with bold zigzag mouldings; the chancel arcade, of two arches, is Perpendicular: there are several stained windows, the east window being a memorial to John Stephens esq. of Caversham Rise: an organ has lately been introduced. The register dates from the year 1597. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £300 with modern residence, in the gift of Christ Church, Oxford, and held since 1843 by the Rev. Arthur Ellison Molineux M.A. of Christ Church, Oxford. There is a Baptist chapel in the village built in 1872, and a Congregational built in 1855. The Earl of Kildare, in 1707, left 18 acres of land, the rents now amounting to £17 to be applied to the use of the poor; and the Countess of Kildare by will in 1748 gave £100, laid out in the purchase of £105 7s. 6d. Old South Sea Annuities now represented by a sum of £116 15s. 2d. in Consols, the dividends of which are applied to the apprenticing of poor children; Mr. J. Stephens left £500 £3 per Cent. Consols, the interest to be spent in providing clothing to be given to the poor in the month of January in each year; Mrs. Burchett's charity of £49 yearly is for the maintenance of dissenting places of worship, and Mrs. Clissold left £100, the interest to be spent in purchasing bread to be distributed to the poor on the anniversary of her death. There are several good residences in the neighbourhood, the most prominent of which is Caversham Park, the seat of Mrs. Crawshay; the mansion is a large and handsome stone building standing in a park of 300 acres. W. D. Mackenzie esq. and Mrs. Crawshay, who is also lady of the manor, are the principal landowners. The soil is chalk and gravel; subsoil, chalky. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The area is 4,772 acres; rateable value, £16,970; and the population in 1871 was 2,406 and in 1881 3,583.

LOWER CAVERSHAM, ¾ miles east, EMMER GREEN, 1½ miles north, and CANE END, 4 miles north, are within this parish. At Emmer Green is a school chapel, distant a mile and a half from the parish church.

Parish Clerk, George Carter.

CHADLINGTON is a township in the parish of Charlbury, 4 miles from Charlbury station, 4 south from Chipping Norton, in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, Chipping Norton rural deanery and archdeaconry, and diocese of Oxford, bounded on the south by the river Evenlode, over which is a bridge to Shorthampton. The ancient church of St. Mary is an edifice principally of the Early English and Decorated periods and consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, south porch and a tall and narrow western tower containing a clock and 6 bells, dating from 1714 to 1841, and re-hung in 1882; the stained east window is a memorial to Abram Tyzack Rawlinson, 1845, and Eliza Eudocia Albinia, his widow, 1863, and represents in 3 lights, figures of Christ St. Nicholas and St. John the Baptist; a smaller memorial window of the same style occupies the north wall of the chancel which was rebuilt in the Decorated style about 1850: the communion table, choir stalls, pulpit and lectern are of carved oak: on the south side of the chancel, adjoining which is the vestry and organ chamber, are piscina and sedilia; and there is a mural tablet to Joseph Rollinson, with Latin inscription, dated 1699; a chapel at the east end of the north aisle contains various ancient mural monuments to the Osbaldeston family; there is a piscina at the east end of each aisle; the nave is separated from the aisles by arcades of four Early English arches on each side, springing from circular piers. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1561; marriages and burials from 1567. The living is a chapelry annexed to the vicarage of Charlbury, in the gift of St. John's College, Oxford and held since 1874 by the Rev. Charles Frederick Camber West formerly fellow of that college, who resides at Charlbury; the Rev. George Carpenter M.A. of Christ Church, Oxford, is curate in charge. Hemming's charity consists of houses and 24 acres at Orsett, Essex, the rent left for that parish and Chadlington in equal parts; the portion for this township, about £48 yearly, is for a lecture and distribution to the poor. The church estate of 32 acres and constables' close &c. produce together about £39 yearly for repairs. Here are reading rooms for working men, built by the late J. H. Langston esq. M.P. There is a Baptist chapel built in 1842; the Catholics have a chapel here built in 1881. Knowle Bury, a mound in Chadlington Fields, is supposed to be the remains of an ancient Danish encampment. The principal landowners are the Earl of Ducie, who is lord of the manor, and St. John's College, Oxford. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, brash rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley and roots. The area is 3,300 acres; rateable value, £4,782; and the population in 1881 was 706.

UPPER COURT 1 mile north-west and LOWER COURT 1 mile west are in this township.

CHALGROVE, anciently "Chalgrave," is a parish and village, 6 miles south-west from Tetsworth and 10 south-west from Thame, in the hundred of Ewelme, union and county court district of Thame, rural deanery of Aston and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. A stream runs through the village and turns several mills. The church of St. Mary is an ancient structure of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, nave, aisles and a tower containing 6 bells: the church is a fine example of the Decorated period, with a good east window of three lights, three sedilia and piscina, and on the north side a very remarkable hagioscope: the nave is divided from the aisles by arcades of three Transition Norman arches on each side; there are some remains of ancient frescoes, several good monuments and brasses to Reginald Barantyne esq. 1441; Drugo Barantyne esq. and his wives Joan, 1437, and Beatrice, 1446; and Thomas, son of Thomas Barantyne (14th cent.); the church is now (1883) undergoing restoration, under the direction of Messrs. Morris and Stallwood, of Reading: these works will be in part carried out from a fund of about £70 a year, arising from land left for the purpose of keeping the fabric in repair: the chancel will be repaired at the cost of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, who are appropriators of the great tithes; during a violent tempest on January 5th, 1727, the steeple of the church was blown down and the bells broken. The register dates from the year 1538 and includes those of the parish of Warpsgrove. The living is a vicarage with the chapelry of Berrick Salome annexed, joint gross yearly value, £379 with residence and 3½ acres of glebe, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, and held since 1832 by the Rev. Robert French Laurence M.A. formerly student of Christ Church. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities for distribution in clothing, bread and money amount to about £23 a year: there are also yearly sums of about £80 for church purposes and £8 for apprenticing. This place was the scene of a battle on Sunday the 18th June, 1643, between the forces of King Charles I. and the Parliamentarians, when the celebrated John Hampden, then in command of a Buckinghamshire regiment, received his death-wound, as it is supposed, from the bursting of one of his pistols; he was taken to Thame, where he died, and was afterwards buried at Great Hampden, in Buckinghamshire; a monument in commemoration of the event, erected on the spot, chiefly through the instrumentality of Lord Nugent, was inaugurated on the two hundredth anniversary of the battle, June 18th, 1843; and bears a medallion portrait of the patriot, with inscription. The principal manor belongs to Magdalen College, Oxford, but there are two others which belong to Lincoln College, Oxford, and to the Blount family respectively. The principal landowners are the President and Scholars of Magdalen College, Oxford, the Rector and Fellows of Lincoln College, Oxford, J.K. and C. Hedges, esqrs. of Wallingford, the Rev. C. R. Powys, and the Blount family. The soil is clay, gravel and loam; subsoil, clay and gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and roots, farmed on the four-course system. The area is 2,313 acres; rateable value, £3,824; and the population in 1881 was 512.

ROFFORD is a liberty ½ mile south, with a population in 1881 of 20.

CHARLBURY is a parish and station on the Oxford and Worcester section of the Great Western railway, 7 miles north-west from Woodstock, 7 north from Witney, 7 south-east from Chipping Norton and 72 from London, forming South Banbury hundred, which is attached to Chadlington hundred, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford: it is pleasantly situated on an eminence in the vicinity of a wooded country and from various points in the neighbourhood, extensive and pleasingly diversified prospects are obtainable. The river Evenlode flows through the parish. The church of St. Mary is an edifice of mixed styles, originally Norman: it was enlarged in the thirteenth century, when the tower was built, the height being subsequently increased, and in the time of Henry VII. further additions were made to the church; it now consists of chancel with aisles, nave, north transept, aisles, south-porch and a lofty western embattled tower containing a fine peal of 6 bells: the chancel has a Decorated east window of five lights and a good open timbered roof of the same date: the arcades of the chancel are Early English: the north transept has arches of the same date, a singular Decorated north window and a Perpendicular roof; the nave is separated from the north aisle by an arcade of three Norman arches and from the south aisle, which is very wide, by three of Early English character and has a Perpendicular roof; the tower combines both these styles, and is a fine work: the church contains monuments of the Jenkinson family, ancestors of Lord Liverpool, who possessed property in this parish, but sold it to the Duke of Marlborough; and a memorial to Elizabeth Viscountess Hereford, ob. 1742: in 1857 the interior of the church underwent complete repair, and in 1874 the chancel was rebuilt by the Duke of Marlborough, who is impropriator of the great tithes. The register dates from the year 1559 and records a visitation of the plague, which continued from 10th June to November 25th, 1583. The living is a vicarage with the chapelries of Shorthampton and Chadlington annexed, joint net yearly value £800 with residence and 360 acres of glebe, in the gift of St. John's College, Oxford, and held since 1874 by the Rev. Charles Frederick Cumber West B.D. formerly fellow of that college and surrogate. There are chapels for Wesleyans, Baptists (erected in 1866), and Primitive Methodist, and a Meeting-house of the Society of Friends. There are charities of £8 yearly for apprenticing, about £28 for public uses, and £2 14s. from John Penson's charity for bread. A curious custom, similar in its principal feature to that of Dunmow, once prevailed here, by which a flitch of bacon was awarded to that villager who for a space of forty years had been pre-eminently distinguished for minding his or her own business; it was last given, now long since, to one George Hackin. The market granted by King Stephen, is held on Friday; it was formerly of considerable importance. Fairs are held on the 1st January, second Friday in Lent, May 13th, second Friday after 12th August, and first Friday in October. In this parish are the remains of Clattercote Priory, founded in the time of King John and dedicated to St. Leonard; at the Dissolution its revenues were estimated at about £35. Near Baywell gate is a portion of the ancient Grimsdyke. The manor of Charlbury was founded by the Mercian kings and was given by them to the Bishop of Lincoln, from whom it passed by exchange to the abbots and monks of Eynsham; it remained in possession of that monastery until the Dissolution, and was subsequently purchased by Sir Thomas White, the founder of St. John's College, Oxford, to which society it continued to belong until recently, when it became by exchange the property of Lord Churchill. The principal landowners are the Duke of Marlborough, Lord Churchill and Viscount Dillon. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, brash rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley and roots. Rateable value for Charlbury and Walcot is £7,219; the population of the parish (including the township of Walcot), in 1881 was 1,325.

Walcot is a township in the parish of Charlbury, distant about half a mile and consisting of one farm; Lord Churchill is lord of the manor and principal landowner: the area is 434 acres; the population in 1881 was 9.

Parish Clerk, Joseph Williams.

CHARLTON-ON-OTMOOR, with the Hamlets of FENCOTT and MURCOTT.

CHARLTON-ON-OTMOOR is a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Islip and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. A small stream, called the river Ray, runs through the parish and joins the Cherwell at Islip. Charlton is 9 miles north-east from Oxford, 2½ north-east from the Islip station on the London and North Western railway and 6 south from Bicester. The church of St. Mary the Virgin at Charlton is a building of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries and has undergone a thorough repair and been re-seated with open sittings of stained deal; it consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, south-porch and a lofty embattled western tower, with crocketed pinnacles at the angles, and containing 5 bells and a sanctus bell: the chancel, of Late Decorated and Perpendicular character, has sedilia and piscina, and opposite to these, in the north wall, a plain sepulchral recess, near which is a stone slab, with an elegant cross fleurie of the fourteenth century, to John de Belvoir, rector in 1361; by far the most interesting object in the church is the very fine and perfect rood loft which forms a narrow gallery about three feet wide, projected from a finely worked screen, and supported by intersecting ribs elaborately traceried, the whole being finished by a cornice; the work may be taken to date from the Early Tudor period, and much of its original colour and gilding remains; by immemorial custom a garland string upon a wooden cross is placed upon the rood loft every year on May-day, in the place of the ancient rood: the nave is separated from the aisles by arcades of Early English arches on each side: the pulpit is of pannelled oak, with a carved dorser and sounding board and dates from 1616: the font is plain and round and has a singular crested cover: at the end of each aisle are remains of altars, with piscinæ: on the floor of the chancel is a brass with effigy, habited in cope, to Thomas Key, rector, 1466-75, canon of Lincoln and chaplain to John Chedworth, bishop of Lincoln: in the churchyard stand the pediment and lofty shaft of a plain Early English cross raised on three steps. The register dates from the year 1577. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £700 with residence, and 80 acres of glebe, in the gift of Queen's College, Oxford, and held since 1862 by the Rev. Thomas William Falcon M.A. late fellow and tutor of that college. There are Wesleyan and Baptist chapels at Charlton and a Primitive Methodist chapel at Murcott. The township of Charlton has £8 yearly for fuel for the poor, and Fencott and Murcott £2 12s. 6d. Mr. John Rowland, who is lord of the manor of Charlton, and the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, who are lords of the manor of Fencott and Murcott, are the principal landowners. The soil is chiefly clay; a very little of it, at Charlton, stone brash. The chief crops are wheat, barley and beans. The area of the whole parish is 1,864 acres, of which 270 acres are in pasture; rateable value, £2,988; the population in 1881 was, for Charlton, 290; Fencott and Murcott 212.

CHASTLETON is a parish and village on the Gloucestershire border, 4 miles south-east from Moreton-in-the-Marsh and 5 south-west from Chipping Norton, in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is an ancient structure in the Norman and Early English Transition and later styles, consisting of chancel, nave, south aisle, a small north chapel of Late Perpendicular date, and an embattled tower, the basement of which forms a porch, at the west end of the south aisle and containing 6 bells, dated respectively 1696, 1731 (two), 1762, 1811 and 1825: the stained east window is a modern example of the Early English style, with slender detached shafts, and was erected in 1878, in memory of the late John Henry Whitmore Jones and Dorothy his wife: there is another in the south aisle to their son Walter, who died in 1872: the chancel arch is Early English; the nave and aisle are divided by an arcade of four arches, two being Norman Transition and the others Early English: the font is circular and of the Decorated period: there are a few carved benches and heraldic tiles, and on the floor at the east end of the nave are brasses inscribed to Catharine (Willington), wife of Anthony Throkmorton, 1592, with armorial shields and effigies of a lady with five sons and five daughters; and to Edmund Ansley gent. 1613, with effigies of himself, wife, seven sons and three daughters: there is also a mural tablet at the east end of the south aisle to Dr. Henry Jones, chancellor of Bristol, 1694; and a brass inscription to William Bankes esq. of Winstanley, Lanc. 1676: the church will seat 140 persons. The register dates from 1586. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £470 with residence and glebe let for £20, in the gift of and held since 1879 by the Rev. Gustavus Alfred Sneyd M.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge. The charities for distribution in bread, clothing and money amount to about £25 annually. Chastleton Barrow, near the "Cross Hands," on the Addlestrop road, is a large circular mound, conjectured to be of Danish origin, and probably constructed on the occasion of the victory of Edmund Ironside over Canute A.D. 1016. Chastleton House, the seat of Miss Whitmore Jones, who is lady of the manor and principal landowner, is a noble embattled Tudor mansion, built in the reign of James I. by Walter Jones esq. with bold projecting gables, and wide mullioned windows; it contains some rich oak carving, ancient tapestry and oil paintings The banqueting hall measures 72 by 19 feet: the Bible given by Charles I. to Bishop Juxon immediately before his execution is in the possession of Miss Jones. Robert Catesby, the conspirator, to whom in 1605 it belonged, is said to have sold the estate of Chastleton to provide funds for the Gunpowder plot. The soil is strong loam, stone brash and gravel; subsoil the same. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans and roots. The area is 1,769 acres; rateable value, £1,472; the population in 1881 was 208.

CHECKENDON is a parish and village upon the Chiltern Hills, in the hundred of Langtree, union of Henley, rural deanery of Henley and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 7 miles west from Henley, 19 from Oxford, 8 north-west from Reading, 7 south-east from Wallingford, and 4½ south-west from the Goring station on the Great Western railway. The church of SS. Peter and Paul is chiefly a Norman structure, consisting of apsidal chancel, nave, porch, and an embattled tower of Perpendicular date, containing 6 bells: the chancel arch is good Norman, with shafts and sculptured caps, the nave walls are also original, but the windows, doorway and porch are Perpendicular, and the latter retains a stoup: there are floor tiles of the same pattern as at Harpsden, and brasses to John Rede, "servant of the king," 1404, with a triple canopy and marginal inscription; an inscription only to Cecilia, wife of John Rede, 1428, effigy lost; Walter, son of Sir William Beauchamp, c. 1430, with a figure of a soul, borne by two angels; and Anna, daughter of John Gaynesford, of Crowhurst, Surrey, and his wife Katherine; and wife of Richard Bowett esq. 1490. The register dates from the year 1719, but is in bad condition until 1802. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £650 with residence, in the gift of University College, Oxford, and held since 1855 by the Rev. Charles John Abbey M.A. late fellow of that college. Parslow's charity provides coats yearly for two old men of this parish, 5s. for distribution in money, and 10s. for a sermon. The poor of Checkendon have also a claim to reception in Allnutt's almshouses at Goring, and the same charity contributes to the apprenticing and outfit of boys from this parish. Wyfold Court, the property of the representatives of the late Edward Hermon esq. is situated about 1½ miles from the church, in the Henley direction. Hook End is the residence of Benjamin Palmer esq.; Little Stoke, the residence of William Charles Dodd esq. is situate by the Thames, opposite Moulsford station. Braziers House, the residence of Edward Wells esq. is situated at the foot of the Chiltern hills, in the centre of richly ornamented woodlands, 5 miles from Wallingford. The principal landowners are the trustees of the late Edward Hermon esq. Mrs. Fraser Thomas Duff, Richard Wake esq. Captain Adolphus Albert Garland, William Charles Dodd esq. and the Rev. Charles John Abbey M.A. The soil is chalk and clay; subsoil, chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. The area is 3,063 acres; rateable value, £3,776; the population in 1881 was 383.

GREAT CHESTERTON, with the hamlet of LITTLE CHESTERTON, forms a parish, in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, and diocese and archdeaconry of Oxford, 2 miles south-west from Bicester and 11 north-east from Oxford, situated on a branch of the river Ray. The Roman road, "Akeman Street," passes through the parish. The church of St. Mary is a stone structure of mixed styles, but mostly Decorated; it was consecrated in 1238, and consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, south porch and a western tower of the Decorated period, terminating in an open quatrefoiled parapet and containing 4 bells: the chancel retains its piscina and three elegant sedilia, with detached shafts, and the rood screen remains as well as communion rails of Jacobean date; the nave is separated from the north aisle by three Transition Norman arches, on round pillars; the south arcade consists of as many large and lofty arches of the Decorated period, also rising from circular columns: the font is Norman, plain and round: at the end of the south aisle are remains of a piscina: there are brasses to William Maunde, 1612, and Anne his wife, with effigies and a shield of arms; and to George Maunde, 1628; and mural and other monuments to Richard, son of George Maunde, 1615. The register dates from the year 1540. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £200 with residence and 215 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Warden and scholars of New College, Oxford, and held since 1849 by the Rev. William Fraine Fortescue M.A. of that college. Chesterton Lodge is the seat of George Rochfort Clarke esq. J.P. The Earl of Jersey, who is lord of the manor, and New College, Oxford, are the chief landowners. The soil is stony; subsoil, stone. The chief crops are wheat and barley. The area is 2,850 acres; rateable value, £2,842; the population in 1881 was 317.

CHINNOR, in Domesday "Chenore," is a parish in the hundred of Lewknor, union of Wycombe, county court district of Thame, rural deanery of Aston and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 4½ miles south from Thame. The village has a pretty and picturesque appearance, being situated at the base of the Chiltern Hills, which rise in the form of an amphitheatre around it. The White Leaf cross and the Eton cross, on the scouring of which the tenure of certain land depends, are conspicuous objects in the landscape. The Watlington and Princes Risborough (Great Western) railway has a station here, 47 miles from London. The church of St. Andrew, constructed of flint, is a very fine example of the Early Decorated English style, consisting of a spacious chancel, nave, aisles, clerestory and a western tower with projecting pediment and saddle-back roof, containing 6 bells, four of which are dated respectively 1651, 1635, 1663 and 1620: in the north and south windows of the sacrarium are some fine remains of ancient glass, consisting of figures of an archbishop and bishop, a lady and SS. Laurence and Alban: the chancel retains piscina and sedilia, and at the back of the latter are fixed brasses to John Holtham, "magister in theologia," with effigy in academical dress, 1361; Alexander Chelseye, rector, 1388, and a floriated cross with the head of a priest in the centre, c. 1320; the slabs to which these belong, formerly in the chancel, are now in the porch: the stained east window was the joint gift of Sir W. A. Musgrave bart. late rector and the late Samuel Turner esq. and cost £152: on the chancel walls hang a series of paintings by Sir James Thornhill, of Our Lord, the Evangelists and Apostles: the altar-piece represents The Entombment: a fine Early Decorated screen divides the chancel and nave, to the right of which, in the nave, is a plain piscina: arcades of five arches separate the nave and aisles: the south aisle has a piscina, with stone shelf and a fine sepulchral recess; in the western bay of this aisle, now used as a vestry, are the remaining brasses, as follows, of which the first three were discovered in 1854, during repairs to the north aisle: John Cray, esquire to Richard II. 1392; Reginald Malyns, with effigy in armour and two wives, c. 1385; Esmoun de Malyns, son of preceding, with demi-effigies of himself and wife Isabel, c. 1385; inscription to Adam Ramseye, c. 1400; Robert atte Heelde, with mutilated effigy, and wife Katherine, c. 1410; Nicholas atte Heelde, son of preceding, and his wife Margery, c. 1410; a man and wife of Malyn's family, c. 1390; Reginald Malyns esq. 1430; Folke Paffe esq. 1514, and two wives, and an inscription to John Caistemas, c. 1400. The church was restored in 1865. The register of baptisms dates from 1581, but is irregular and defective; marriages and burials from 1622. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £520 with residence, in the gift of Wenman Wykeham Musgrave esq. and held since 1876 by the Rev. Edward James Howman M.A. of University College, Oxford. Here is a Congregational chapel, built in 1805; also a Primitive Methodist chapel. A reading room and working men's club was erected in 1878, and is supported by voluntary contributions and members' subscriptions. Lace and chair making are carried on here and in the immediate neighbourhood. Wenman Wykeham Musgrave esq. is lord of the manor. Magdalen College, Oxford, Thomas Taylor esq. Mr. Greenwood and Wenman Wykeham Musgrave esq. with some smaller proprietors are the principal landowners. The soil is a good arable; subsoil, clay and chalk. The area is 2,656 acres, which consists of arable, pasture and a considerable portion of wood land; rateable value, £4,235; the population of the entire parish in 1881 was 1,237.

HENTON liberty is 1 mile north, on the borders of Bucks; here is a small Congregational chapel.

SPRIGGS ALLEY hamlet, 1½ miles south, also on Bucks border.

CHIPPING NORTON is a parish and municipal borough, market and union town, head of a county court district, polling place for the county, and terminus of a branch of the West Midland section of the Great Western railway, situated in the north-west part of the county, on the borders of Worcestershire, 73 miles from London through Islip and 77½ through Oxford, from which city it is distant 19 north-west, 13 south-west from Banbury and 8 south-east from Moreton-in-Marsh; it is in the hundred of Chadlington, rural deanery of its own name and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The name of the town, which stands on an eminence, and consists principally of one long street, is derived from the Saxon words, "Ceapian," to buy, and "Neprune," Northmen, meaning Market of the Northmen. King John granted a charter for a yearly fair about A.D. 1200. The borough returned two members to Parliament in the reigns of Edward I. and III. but the inhabitants were subsequently relieved of the privilege on their own petition; it is governed by a corporation, consisting of a mayor, four aldermen and twelve common councillors, who act as the Urban Sanitary Authority. The common adjoining the town, 198 acres in extent, was given by Lord Arundel, for the benefit of the householders. A line of railway intended to connect Banbury with this town and Cheltenham was commenced some time since, but the only portion completed and working is that between this place and Cheltenham. The church of St. Mary the Virgin, situated on the edge of a valley, on the north side of the town, is a large and fine structure of mixed styles, chiefly Perpendicular, and erected on the site of a previous church existing in 1293; it consists of chancel, with north aisle, clerestoried nave, aisles, an outer aisle, since added to the north side, and a lofty embattled western tower with pinnacles and containing 8 bells, dated 1825 and a sanctus bell of the sixteenth century: the clerestory is lighted by large and fine square-headed windows of Perpendicular character, and at the east end, over the chancel arch, by a large stained window with elaborate double tracery: part of the chancel aisle, which was apparently a chapel, is divided from the chancel by a low parclose of stone; it has a hagioscope somewhat unusually placed, underneath which is a piscina, and adjoining it, in the chancel arch, are the door and steps to the rood loft; on each side of the east front of this arch is a sculptured niche with pedestal and canopy; and beneath that on the north side, three similar niches, with exquisitely carved canopies; on the south side of the chancel is a three canopied sedilia, and there is an original stone altar, with piscina, in the vestry: the south porch is hexagonal and has a fine vaulted roof with grotesque heads at the intersection of the groins; above it is a room approached by a door from within the nave: the stained east window was erected at Easter 1875; two windows in the south aisle and one in the chancel are richly stained: near the porch is the ancient font: at the west end of the inner north aisle is an altar tomb with recumbent figures of Thomas Rickards gent. and Elizabeth, his wife, 1579: in the chancel aisle another altar tomb with effigies of Richard Croft esq. lord of the manor, 1502, and Agnes, his wife, 1509; there are several other monuments of ancient date, including one to Henry Cornish, son of the founder of the almshouses in Church street, and brasses to Isabella, wife of Robert Stokys, 1458; Thomas Grene, merchant, 1465; and Agnes, wife of William Tanner, and previously of William Dyar, of Abingdon, 1563; many other brasses of the fifteenth and sixteenth century are stored away in the room over the porch: on the north side of the church is the mausoleum of the Dawkins family, of Over Norton, covered with ancient and modern tablets and brasses: the church was restored and partly rebuilt and the tower re-erected in 1823-7 at a cost of about £3,000 and other alterations took place in 1841: a further and more effective restoration (over which about £3,500 has already been expended) has been going on for some years past, and it is hoped will soon be completed. The register dates from the year 1563. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value, £300 with residence, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester, and held since 1866 by the Rev. Francis Harris M.A. of St. Catharine's College, Cambridge and surrogate. There is a Catholic chapel at Rock hill, erected in 1837, at a cost of £4,000, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity; it will seat about 400 persons: there is also a Baptist chapel in New street, founded in 1662; Wesleyan chapel in West street, founded in 1796; and Primitive Methodists chapel in Diston's lane; and a Meeting House for the Society of Friends, in New street. A cemetery consisting of 3½ acres, presented by W. Bliss esq. for the joint use of Chipping Norton and Over Norton, was opened in 1882; and is under the management of the Urban Sanitary authority, and contains one mortuary chapel. There was formerly a castle here, built in the reign of Stephen, of the foundation of which there are still some remains on the north-east side of the church; portions of a Norman structure exist in a cellar in High street, and a Pointed gateway with receding mouldings, and a small window in Goddards lane: it is supposed there was formerly a monastic foundation where Priory farm now stands, in Over Norton. The Town Hall is a structure of stone in the Classic style, with a portico, and contains a well-furnished reading room and library. Here are factories for woollen goods, which give employment to many hundreds of hands, both male and female. Leather gloves are also made here. The town is situated in an agricultural district and largely depends on the landed interest. A market on Wednesday is chiefly for grain. Fairs are held on the first Wednesday in every month; cattle and sheep in large numbers are brought hither for sale, and the fairs are usually well frequented by farmers and dealers; there is also a statute fair on the Wednesday before and after October 10th, for the hiring of servants. There are almshouses in Church street, founded by Henry Cornish in 1649, for 8 widows, with an endowment of 20s. yearly for repairs, and 2s. per week for each inmate; Leach and West's charity of about £4 a year is for decayed tradesmen; and there are several charities for distribution in kind and money, amounting to about £52; there are also charities of about £6 a year for apprenticing. The charity trustees are likewise governors of a free school and almshouses in Stow-on-the-Wold, and are empowered to appoint the master and mistress of the school. The mayor and aldermen are lords of the manor. The principal landowners are the trustees of John Ward esq. W. Bliss, F. T. K. Guy, T. Keck, W. Laslett, W. G. Dawkins and J. Parker esqs. and Miss Thomason Gibbs. The area is 2,091 acres; rateable value, £11,919; and the population in 1881 was 4,167.

Sexton, George Bull.

Over Norton is a hamlet of Chipping Norton, from which it is distant three-quarters of a mile north. Over Norton House the seat of William G. Dawkins esq. is a mansion in the Tudor style, rebuilt in 1879, and standing in a well-wooded park of about 90 acres. William G. Dawkins esq. is lord of the manor. A handsome drinking fountain with polished marble pillars has been erected to the memory of Col. Harry Dawkins and Emma his wife, by their four children. The poor's allotments of 50 acres, awarded 1770, produce £50 yearly for fuel, and Wright's charity of £3 12s. is for bread. The area is 1,350 acres; rateable value, £3,348; the population in 1881 was 440.

CHISELHAMPTON, vulgarly "Chisilton," is a parish in the hundred of Dorchester, union of Abingdon, county court district of Abingdon, rural deanery of Cuddesdon and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, about 6 miles south-east from Oxford on the river Thame, over which is an ancient bridge, 5 miles south-by-south-west from Wheatley station on the Great Western railway, and 7 from Abingdon. The church of St. Katherine is a small modern structure, erected in the year 1762, in place of the ancient church of St. Mary then removed, by Charles Peers esq. and was consecrated August 22, 1763; it consists of chancel and nave, with large round-headed windows, and a bell turret, surmounted by a vane pierced with the name of the saint; there are several mural monuments to the Peers family. The register dates from the year 1556, but all entries previous to 1762, were made in the register of Stadhampton. The living is a vicarage, consolidated with that of Stadhampton, joint net annual value from 280 acres of glebe, £165 including four Oxford Canal shares, bequeathed to the consolidated benefice by the late Charles Peers esq. D.C.L. with residence, in the gift of John Witherington Peers esq. and held since 1881 by the Rev. George Barrow Pennell M.A., T.C.D. who resides at Stadhampton Vicarage. Chiselhampton House, the residence of Mrs. Parke, is a commodious mansion with grounds. John Witherington Peers esq. is lord of the manor and sole landowner. The soil is clay; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and beans. The area is 1,210 acres; rateable value £1,405; and the population in 1881 was 103.

Parish Clerk, David Bowden.

CHURCHILL is parish and village 3 miles south-west-by-west from Chipping Norton, in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Chipping Norton, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, on the river Evenlode. The Great Western branch railway to Chipping Norton commences in and passes through the parish, and the station (Chipping Norton junction), is 1½ miles south-west of the village. The church of All Saints, erected in 1826 on an eminence in the village, at the sole expense of James Haughton Langston esq. from designs by Mr. John Plowman, of Oxford, is a good example of modern Perpendicular work and consists of chancel and nave, and a western embattled and pinnacled tower, containing a clock and 6 bells, five of which, dated 1630, were removed from the old church; one is inscribed "Our mournful sound doth warning give," the couplet being finished on the tenor, "That man cannot heare all wayes live"; the basement of the tower forming a porch; the tower is an exact replica, reduced one-third, of that of Magdalen College, Oxford: the roof of the nave and chancel is of open timber work with stone angel corbels and is a copy of that of Christ Church hall, Oxford: the pulpit is of Caen stone decorated with arcading, surmounted by large finials: the beautiful stained memorial window at the east end of the chancel was erected in July, 1866, to the founder of the church by his tenantry; it represents in its four lights certain miracles of Christ; the meeting of Abraham and Melchisedek; the payment of tribute by the apostles; and the purchase of Araunah's threshing floor by David: the stone work of the reredos is richly illuminated; the tracery of all the windows in the nave is copied from various examples of the Perpendicular style in Oxford, the second window from the east on each side being stained; that on the north is in memory of Elizabeth Catherine, widow of the late Charles Barter, 50 years rector of the parish, and sister of the founder, who died in 1868: the chancel of the old church, situated about half a mile to the east, was retained as a mortuary chapel, as no burial ground is attached to the present church; this chancel was restored in 1869 and fitted with pine seats: the stained east window is a memorial to the above named Rev. Charles Barter, ob. 1868; a holy table of oak was added by his widow: there are some interesting mural tablets, the oldest of which is a brass to John Gostwick, 1618: there are also monuments to Sir John Walter bart. of Sarsden house, 1722; Lady Mary Tufton, daughter of Lord Thanet, clerk controller of the green cloth to Queen Anne; and Sarah, wife of John Langston esq. of Sarsden house, 1800. The register dates from the year 1630 and contains the following entry on Dec. 15th, 1731, "Warren, son of the Rev. Mr. Perniston Hastings, was baptized." The living is a discharged vicarage, yearly value, £177, annexed to the rectory of Sarsden, in the gift of the Earl of Ducie and held since 1868 by the Rev. William Edward Dickson Carter M.A. of New College, Oxford, who resides at Sarsden. The charities for distribution in money amount to about £13, which is distributed at Christmas. The house in which Warren Hastings was born still stands in the parish. Here is a handsome fountain in memory of James Haughton Langston esq. who died in 1863 and Julia Frances, who died in 1869, daughter of Thomas, 1st Earl of Ducie, erected in 1870, by John, 3rd Earl of Ducie and Julia, his wife, daughter of James H. Langston esq. The Earl of Ducie is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil is stone brash and clay; subsoil, clay and light marl. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans, peas and roots. The area is 2,850 acres; rateable value, £4,973; and the population in 1881 was 505.

CLANFIELD is a parish and village 2 miles west from Bampton, 2 from Alvescot station, on the Oxford, Witney and Fairford line, 8 south-west from Witney and 4 north from Faringdon, in the hundred of Bampton, union of Witney, county court district of Faringdon, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The river Isis bounds a small part of the parish on the south and separates it from Berkshire. The church of St. Stephen is an ancient structure chiefly in the Early English style, consisting of chancel with north aisle, nave, north aisle, south porch, low embattled western tower of the Decorated period, surmounted by pinnacles and containing 5 bells: the chancel is Early English and retains a piscina of that date, and sedilia of three steps formed in the sill of a window: the chancel arch is Transition Norman: the arcade between the north aisle and nave is also Norman, and the south doorway is of similar character: the font, a Perpendicular work, is octagonal and panelled: the church will seat 200 persons: it was thoroughly restored in 1870. The register dates from about the year 1615; the early portion, however, is only an imperfect fragment. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £110 with residence, in the joint gift of G. H. Elliot esq. and Christ Church, Oxon, and held since 1876 by the Rev. Edward Dix B.A. of Exeter College, Oxford. There are Primitive Methodist and Wesleyan chapels. The charities, amounting in all to £5 17s. yearly, are distributed to the poor in small sums of money, half on Good Friday (when the distribution takes place at the church door) and half on St. Thomas' day. William White esq. is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are Christ Church, Oxford, and Mr. Henry Newman. The soil is principally red gravel; subsoil, gravel. The area is 1,631 acres; rateable value, £3,130; the population in 1881 was 499.

CLATTERCOTE, formerly extra-parochial, is now a parish in the hundred and union of Banbury, county court district of Banbury, situated on the borders of Northamptonshire and Warwickshire, about 6 miles north from Banbury and 2 miles north from Cropredy station; it contains but one ancient and extensive dwelling-house, the only existing remains of a priory, founded here in the time of King John A.D. 1209, and dedicated to St. Leonard: it is also stated to have been at one time an hospital for leprous brethren; a portion of the cellars of the priory are still intact, and adjoining is a burial-place. On a hill about half a mile from the dwelling-house is a large and deep pool of 21 acres, formerly used as a bath by the brethren of the hospital; remains of a tesselated pavement have been seen at the bottom when the water has been drawn off; it now forms one of the three large reservoirs in the neighbourhood for the supply of the Oxford canal. W. C. Cartwright esq. M.P. is lord of the manor and sole landowner. The soil is heavy; subsoil, red stone and clay. The chief crops are the usual cereals with large amount of pasture. The area is 670 acres; rateable value, £735; the population in 1881 was 9.

CLAYDON is a chapelry and ecclesiastical parish formed in 1851 out of the civil parish of Cropredy, on the borders of Warwickshire and Northamptonshire, 3 miles north from Cropredy station, 6½ miles north from Banbury and 29 north from Oxford, in the hundred, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The Oxford canal passes through. The church of St. James is a very ancient and curiously formed structure, and was thoroughly restored in 1860; it consists of chancel, nave, with arcade of three Norman arches, north aisle, and western tower with saddle-back roof, containing 3 bells; the capitals of two of the piers show that the mouldings were cut before the figuring was carved; the reredos is of coloured alabaster and the sedilia of Caen stone; and there is a piscina on the north side, three of the chancel windows are stained. The churchyard has been considerably enlarged by the addition of land given by the vicar; the expenses attending the enlargement were defrayed by subscriptions. The register dates from the year 1569. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £285 with residence, erected in 1867, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford, and held since 1864 by the Rev. George William Palmer. Here is a small Primitive Methodist chapel. The poor's land produces about £12 yearly for the poor in fuel. Freckleton's charity, of about £13 yearly, is usually applied by the vicar to general purposes, and Calcott's, of £1 16s. is for education. The principal landowners are the Rev. J. A. Gould, the Ven. Archdeacon C. W. Holbech and Joseph Preedy esq. The soil is principally clay; subsoil, various. The chief crops are wheat and beans, with larger proportion of pasture than arable. The area is 1,170A. 2R. 39P.; rateable value, £2,621; the population in 1881 was 300.

CLIFTON HAMPDEN is a parish in the hundred of Dorchester, Bullingdon division, union and county court district of Abingdon, rural deanery of Cuddesdon, and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 3½ miles east-south-east from Abingdon and 1¼ east from Culham station, on the Great Western railway, bounded on the south by the river Isis, over which a substantial brick bridge of six pointed arches, groined with recesses, has been built by the lord of the manor, H. H. Gibbs esq. in place of the old ferry. The church of St. Michael and All Angels is a small edifice in mixed styles, beautifully situated on a cliff at the bend of the river, and consisting of chancel, nave, aisles, south porch, and an elegant open bell-turret on the western gable, terminating with slender spire; it was restored in 1844, under the direction of the late Sir Gilbert Scott R.A. by Henry Hucks Gibbs esq. in accordance with the wishes of the late patron, George Henry Gibbs esq.; and in the chancel, on the north side, is a fine tomb with a recumbent portrait effigy of Mr. Gibbs: the chancel has on the south side two sedilia and a piscina, and is separated from the nave by an elaborately worked brass screen, with figures in bronze, designed by the late Sir G. G. Scott R.A. and placed in the church on the addition of the new aisle: the reredos is of mosaic work, and represents the institution of the Blessed Sacrament: the roof of the nave, continued over the chancel, is a restoration of the old Decorated roof, but with additional ornaments introduced: the north aisle, a later addition, is separated from the nave by three Decorated arches, with plain mouldings, continuous to the bases; the south arcade has three arches of Transition Norman date, and at its eastern end is a small Decorated chapel, with Transition Norman piscina; at the west end are two lancet windows, and between them rises a tall buttress carrying the bell-turret; a good porch, in the Decorated style, has been added on the south side, and a vestry at the east end of the north aisle, and at the entrance to the churchyard is a substantial open-timbered lych-gate of carved oak: notes of arms and monuments in this church, taken in 1660, are contained in Harl. MS. 4170. The register dates from the year 1572. The living is a vicarage, yearly value £287 with residence and 7 acres of glebe, in the gift of Henry Hucks Gibbs, esq. and held by the Rev. George Heberden M.A. of Oriel College, Oxford. Noye's charity, bequeathed 1831, consists of £1,000 £3 per Cent. Consols, the interest of which is for bread and fuel. H. H. Gibbs esq. is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil is gravel; subsoil, light gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans and oats. The area is 1,030 acres; rateable value, £1,854; the population in 1881 was 347.

COGGES (or COGGS) is a parish bounded on the north by Hailey and Northleigh, on the south by Ducklington, on the east by Southleigh and on the west by Witney. NEWLAND, belonging to this parish, consists of one long street diverging from Bridge street, Witney, on the high road from Oxford to Witney. HIGH COGGS is a hamlet of this parish, 1½ miles south-east, and COGGS proper (where the church is situate) consists of the church, vicarage, National school, one farmhouse and a cottage; it is pleasantly situated, and is approached from Witney by a passage extending to the river Windrush, which here separates Coggs from Witney and is crossed by a wooden bridge; it is in the Wootton hundred, Witney union and county court district, rural deanery of Witney, and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Mary is an ancient edifice of mixed styles, consisting of chancel with north chapel of the Decorated period, nave with clerestory, aisles, south porch, and a singular Decorated tower placed diagonally at the west end of north aisle with a conical roof and containing 3 bells; the chancel has a good Decorated east window; the nave is divided from the aisles by arcades of two Transition Norman arches on either side; the font and the inner doorway of the porch are of the same date: the clerestory is lighted on one side only by three quatrefoil openings in a square panel; there are several mural monuments; in the chapel, which contains a canopied piscina, is a monument to the Blake family and one to Henry White, dated 1677; the lower part of the tower is square, but the upper portion octagonal, and terminating in a pointed roof with finial. The register of baptisms and burials dates from 1653, marriages, 1697. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £150 with residence and 8½ acres of glebe, in the gift of Eton College and held since 1872 by the Rev. James Payne D.C.L. of Queen's College, Oxford. There is a chapel for Wesleyans at Newland. Here was an alien priory of the Benedictine order, attached to the abbey of the Holy Trinity, at Fescamp, in Normandy, and founded by the De Arsics, who held the manor in the early part of the twelfth century, and re-endowed by Manasser De Arsic in 1103 and 1107; the lands and revenues were continually seized in wars with France in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, and after the dissolution of alien monasteries in the second year of Henry V. (1414-15) were finally appropriated by Henry VI. for augmenting the endowment of Eton College: the kitchen and study of the vicarage house, situated close to the church, are the only remains of the priory now existing; south-east of the church, and now occupied as a farm house, are some portions of a mansion erected near the site of the priory in the reign of James I. by Sir William Pope bart. The charities for distribution in bread and clothing amount to about £39 yearly; there are also sums of about £14 connected with the church, and for public uses. Colonel E.W. Harcourt M.P. of Nuneham, is lord of the manor and the principal landowner. The soil is clay and gravel; there is much pasture land; subsoil, clay; the crops are the usual cereals. The area is 2,218 acres; rateable value, £3,264; the population in 1881 was 694.

COMBE (or LONG COMBE) is a village and parish within the parliamentary borough of Woodstock, 66 miles from London, 2½ north-west from Handborough railway station, 6 north-east from Witney, 3 west from Woodstock and 10 north-west from Oxford, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Woodstock, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, bounded on the south by the river Evenlode, and having Blenheim park on the east. The church of St. Laurence, said to have been first erected in 1395, is a good Perpendicular building situated on elevated ground, above the winding Evenlode, (the older church having been placed in the deep adjoining valley) and consists of chancel and nave, north and south porches, and an embattled western tower with pinnacles, containing 5 bells: the chancel has an east window of five lights, retaining, in its Perpendicular tracery, some fragments of old glass; canopied sedilia, and a piscina with drain and basin very perfect; there is a plain chancel arch, on the north side of which the stairs to the rood loft remain, with both doors; on the south side is a Decorated niche; the screen, of Perpendicular date, remains; on the north side of the nave, under the easternmost window, is a hexagonal panelled stone pulpit, with rich tracery, crocketed pinnacles, and a battlemented cornice; the font is similar; in the churchyard is an altar tomb, with quatrefoiled sides; in digging a grave, May 17, 1823, some coins of Queen Elizabeth were met with, and a fine ring of gold, set with a large ruby, and weighing nearly a quarter of an ounce. The register dates from the year 1646. The living is a vicarage, yearly value £163 with residence, in the gift of the rector of Lincoln College, Oxford and held since 1861 by the Rev. John Hoskyns Abrahall M.A. late fellow of that college. The rectory house is in part coeval with, if not prior to, the date of the foundation of Lincoln College, and was embattled towards the east and west, and the south front built by recent incumbents; the style generally is that of the fifteenth century. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels, the former erected in 1835. The charities for distribution in bread and fuel amount to £6 yearly, the church land and cottages produces £19 per annum. The Duke of Marlborough is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil is mostly cold pebble; subsoil, clay. The land is chiefly arable. The area is 1,364 acres; rateable value, £2,771; the population in 1881 was 541.

CORNWELL is a parish and village on the borders of Gloucestershire and Worcestershire, 2½ miles west from Chipping Norton, in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church (dedication unknown) is a plain structure in the Norman and later styles, situated in the grounds of Cornwell House, and consisting of chancel, nave, south porch and a central bell-turret containing 1 small bell: the stained east window was erected in 1876 in memory of the late Miss Penyston; the chancel arch is Transition Norman, pointed, on good corbels: the doorway is plain Norman and the church was partly rebuilt in 1830. The register dates from the year 1662, but is in many parts imperfect. The living is a discharged rectory, net yearly value £150, with residence and 100 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Lord Chancellor and held since 1874 by the Rev. Charles John Elliott Walkey M.A. of Lincoln College, Oxford. Cornwell House the seat of John F. Penyston esq. J.P. is a good stone mansion standing in a small well-wooded park of 40 acres. John Francis Penyston esq. is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil is chiefly limestone brash; subsoil, brash rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and roots. The area is 820 acres; rateable value £1,266; and the population in 1881 was 93.

COTTISFORD is a parish on the borders of Northamptonshire, in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 6 miles north from Bicester and 4 south from Brackley station. The church of St. Mary is an ancient structure, consisting of chancel, nave and tower and was thoroughly restored in 1857: the staircase to the rood loft remains and there is a stone coffin richly sculptured, and a brass of a man in armour and his wife, both kneeling, with eight sons and five daughters, c. 1500. The register dates from the year 1651 and the earliest volume is bound in oak. The living is a rectory, tithe-rent charge £320, with 62 acres of glebe and residence, in the gift of the Provost and fellows of Eton College and held since 1853 by the Rev. Charles Sawkins Harrison M.A. of University College, Durham, who is also rector of Hardwick and Tusmore. John Mansfield bequeathed in 1869 £100 New £3 per Cents. the interest for the poor. Cottisford House is the seat of Edwardes Richard Kendall Rousby esq. Two-thirds of the land belongs to Eton College and the remainder to the Earl of Effingham. The common land, of about 440 acres, was enclosed about 1854. The soil is gravelly; subsoil, stone. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The area is 1,481A. 3R. 20P.; rateable value £1,551; the population in 1811 was 240.

MIDDLE, TEMPLE and CHURCH COWLEY.

COWLEY is a parish, part of which is within the municipal and parliamentary limits of Oxford, in the hundred of Bullingdon, union of Headington, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Cuddesdon and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, extending from Oxford for 2¼ miles south-south-east, and is ½ mile north from Littlemore station on the Great Western railway. The church of St. James is an ancient structure of mixed styles, consisting of chancel with north aisle, nave, north aisle, south porch and a low Perpendicular embattled tower, at the west end: the chancel is Early English, the east end being lighted by a triplet of stained lancet windows: on the north and south sides are niches and the latter retains a piscina: the tower has a good Perpendicular west window: those of the nave are Decorated; there is a plain font and some benches dated 1632; there are memorial windows to Mr. Richard Greening and Miss Cholmely: and upon the walls are extensive traces of ancient frescoes, some portions of which have been restored; the church was restored and enlarged in 1865 under the direction of the late G. E. Street esq. R.A. The register dates from the year 1678. The living is a vicarage, endowed with £600 private benefaction and £600 royal bounty: some other small payments make the total net yearly value of the living £192 with residence: it is in the gift of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford, and held since 1875 by the Rev. George Moore M.A. of Jesus College, Oxford. There is a free reading-room and library. Here are the barracks of the Oxford Military depôt. There is a bread charity of £15 yearly value derived from 10 acres of land. In the parish of Cowley, about half a mile from Magdalen bridge, is the desecrated chapel of St. Bartholomew, a building of transition character from Decorated to Perpendicular, belonging originally to a hospital for lepers, founded by Henry I. who endowed it with £23 yearly: in 1328 Adam de Brome, founder of Oriel College, obtained a grant of the hospital from Edward III. for his society, promising to maintain 8 lepers and a chaplain: during the plague of 1643 the hospital was used as a pest-house, and, being destroyed in the siege, was rebuilt by the College in 1649; in 1833 the buildings were refitted and adapted to the purposes of a cholera hospital: the chapel is a simple parallelogram, with good traceried windows, and contains a rood-screen, dated 1651: eight pensioners, known as "the almsmen of St. Barty," and elected by the freemen of the city, receive a small annual pittance from Oriel College. The Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, are lords of the manor and principal landowners. The soil is clay and gravel. The area is 940 acres; rateable value £19,306; the population in 1871 was 3,725 and in 1881, 5,632.

ROSE HILL is a portion of the parish near Iffley. Here are Congregational and Wesleyan chapels.

COWLEY ST. JOHN is a suburb of Oxford, under which the names of the residents will be found.

OXFORD MILITARY COLLEGE.

The Oxford Military College was founded, with the approval of H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge K.G. Commanding-in-Chief, in 1876 and opened on the 20th of September: its buildings consist in part of those formerly constituting the Cowley Middle Class School and include a chapel, erected in 1870 from designs by Mr. Burton architect, of Oxford; the objects are to provide the best possible education for sons of officers, to prepare any candidates, whether sons of officers or not, for commissions in the military service, and to enable the senior pupils to enter the University as unattached students and to proceed to degrees: it is also the only College where instruction in military riding is given; there are three terms and the vacations are together about 13 weeks; candidates for military commissions should enter not later than the age of 13. The institution is proprietary and owners of 20 shares have the right of nominating a student at a lower rate than others; the fees for non-nominated students vary from 90 to 100 guineas a year; six scholarships are offered annually of the value of £75, £50 and £25 respectively.

CROPREDY, in Domesday "Cropelie," is a parish in the hundred, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington, and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situated on the river Cherwell near the borders of Northamptonshire and Warwickshire, 4 miles north-north-east from Banbury, 27 north from Oxford and 89½ from London by the Great Western railway, which has a station here, the Oxford canal passing through the parish. The church of St. Mary the Virgin, situated on a slight eminence about 30 feet above the river, is a fine Decorated edifice of the fourteenth century, consisting of chancel, nave of four bays with clerestory, aisles, south porch and a massive western embattled tower containing a clock and 6 bells in the key of A. and dated 1689 and a priest's bell cast in 1701 : the church, rebuilt about 1320, has a double piscina and on the north side is a lofty structure of three storeys, perhaps an Eastern sepulchre : on the north pier of the chancel arch is another piscina, with canopy and pinnacles : the north aisle is Perpendicular and had interesting frescoes, the whole of which unfortunately succumbed to exposure during the restoration : the nave arcades consist of four lofty arches on each side with continuous moulding (a rare feature in English churches), which, with the western arch, are very fine ; there are some remains of a remarkably fine rood screen, as well as a screen of the fifteenth century enclosing a chantry chapel in the north aisle : on the east wall, during the restoration, was discovered a fine fresco of the "Day of Judgment." The eagle lectern is very handsome, and the pulpit dates from 1619: in the north chapel is a very ancient chest, probably of the thirteenth century : the stained east window, representing "The Adoration of the Lamb," was the gift of the vicar and churchwardens in 1877 ; there are also other stained windows to the memory of J. Loveday esq. Mr. T. Andrews, and a third, inserted in 1881, to the memory of Miss E. A. Allitt ; the tower of the church being introduced in the lowest compartment on the left : the font is octagonal, each face being panelled and enclosing a shield : it was presented in 1853 by Harriet, widow of John Henry Tonge, in memory of her husband : there are brasses in the church to Elizabeth (Langston) wife of Richard Danvers esq. with effigy, 1482, and to John Danvers esq. 1721 with arms : there is also on the north side of the church a large marble monument with inscription to the same gentleman : the communion plate includes an Elizabethan chalice of silver and a paten and stoup of pewter, given by Mr. Hallowais in 1666 : the fabric was carefully restored under the direction of Ewan Christian esq. in 1876-7, when a triptych painting of the Crucifixion was erected as an altar piece, in memory of Lieut.-Col. Robert Moorsom, Scots Guards, by members of his family. The register dates from the year 1574, and with another 1654-1717, was recovered to the parish after having been long missing, in 1877. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £308 with residence and 65 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford, and held since 1870 by the Rev. William Wood D.D. late fellow of Trinity College, Oxford and rural dean of Deddington. There is a Wesleyan chapel with Sunday school rebuilt in 1881. The poor's allotments of 5 acres produce about £21 yearly for fuel. Under the will of the late Miss Tomson, £30 a year is distributed to twelve of the aged poor by the vicar and churchwardens. There are other charities of £19 a year for educational purposes, £51 for church purposes, and about £10 for distribution in clothing and money. On June 29th, 1644 a furious battle was fought at Cropredy Bridge between Charles I. in person and the Parliamentarians, which terminated in the defeat of the latter : an old breast and back piece with a pot helmet, hang in the vicarage, and cannon shot, buttons, broken swords and rusted weapons are disinterred from time to time in the meadows by the river side ; some relics of interest are also in the possession of the Loveday family and more than one gravestone in the churchyard records that he who is beneath was "a faithful soldier of King Charles ye First," the bridge, first built in 1312 remains, but considerable repairs and alterations, made in 1691 and again about the year 1780, have taken away somewhat of its primitive character ; the base and shaft of a cross remain in a field on the left of the road to Claydon. Williamscote House is the residence of John Edward Taylor Loveday esq. J.P. The manorial rights belong to Brasenose College, Oxford. A dilapidated building with a moat, connected with the canal, is all that now remains of the Manor House. The principal landowners are Brasenose College, Oxford, the Rev. Sir William Henry Cope bart. and J. E. T. Loveday esq. J.P. The date of the enclosure award is May 27th,1775. The soil is generally heavy ; subsoil, clay. The chief crops are barley, wheat and oats, with a larger proportion of pasture. The area of the parish is 1,835A. 1R. 1P. ; rateable value, £4,931 ; the population in 1881 was 515.

PRESCOTE, a lordship in the parish of Cropredy, lies on the borders of Northamptonshire, 4½ miles north-east from Banbury. The Manor house, once the residence of the Danvers family, is now used as a farm house. Lord Overstone is the sole landowner ; the area is 520 acres ; rateable value, £909 ; the population in 1881 was 31.

CROWELL is a parish in the hundred of Lewknor, union and county court district of Thame, rural deanery of Aston and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, about 5½ miles south from Thame, 4 north-west from Tetsworth and one south-west from Chinnor station on the Watlington and Princes Risborough railway, at the foot of the Chiltern Hills. The church of St. Mary, rebuilt in 1877-8, is a small building of flint outside, lined with chalk inside, and covered with red tiles, and consists of chancel, nave, south porch and a modern stone bell-cot containing 1 bell: the chancel is Decorated and appears to have been shortened at an early period; it contains two sedilia: the doorways are Norman: there is a brass to Sir John Payne, parson, 1469, with a demi-effigy and 8 English verses. The register dates from the year 1594 The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £249 with residence and 9 acres of glebe, in the gift of Wenman Wykeham Musgrave esq. of Thame Park, near Thame, and held since 1879 by the Rev. Cadwallader Coker Beck B.A. of Balliol College, Oxford. The principal landowners are Joseph Hill esq. of Kingston, who is lord of the manor, Wenman Wykeham Musgrave esq. Rev. H. W. Burrows and Mr. T. Champion. The soil is chalk and loam; subsoil, chiefly soft stone. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans, peas, seeds and oats; the area is 1,053 acres, some portion of which is woodland; rateable value, £994 17s. 5d.; the population in 1881 was 121.

CROWMARSH GIFFORD is a parish within the parliamentary borough of Wallingford, in Wallingford union and county court district, Langtree hundred, rural deanery of Henley and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, separated from Wallingford in Berkshire by the River Thames, over which is a bridge of fifteen arches; it is distant 1 mile from Wallingford, 16 miles north-west from Reading, 14 south-east from Oxford and 11 north-west from Henley station. The church of St. Mary Magdalen is a small but very interesting building, principally Early Norman, of a plain and massive character and consists of chancel, nave and small north transept; the west end is unique, having small round windows with an ancient Norman doorway: in the chancel is an elegant Norman piscina consisting of a recessed moulded arch with a projecting circular basin, ribbed on the under sides: the massive western door, still bearing the marks of bullet holes made, it is said, during the siege of Wallingford at the time of the civil war, has been recently removed to the vestry: there is a brass to William Hydesley gent, 1575 with mutilated effigy and to his wife Margaret and eight surviving children: the whole was restored in 1869: the rents of certain lands in the parish, of between one and two acres, are applied to the repairs of the church. The register dates, of baptisms, from the year 1575; marriages, 1618; burials, 1576. The living is a rectory, commuted yearly value £247 with residence, in the gift of Viscount Barrington, and held since 1878 by the Rev. Richard Ibbetson Porter M.A. of Corpus Christi college, Cambridge. A horse fair is held here annually on August 2nd. Howbery Park, is the seat of Henry Bertie Watkin Williams-Wynn esq. J.P.; the handsome mansion, commanding a fair view of the surrounding country, was rebuilt about a century since, after its destruction by fire: there is also a good house, called Col d'Arbres, the residence of Alfred De Mornay esq. Charles Hedges esq. is lord of the manor. The principal landowner is Alfred De Mornay esq. The soil is exceedingly fertile, of the upper green sand formation, and a considerable portion is rich in phosphate of lime in the form of coprolites, which are found distributed through the soil and extend beyond the parish of Crowmarsh Gifford into the neighbouring hamlet of Preston Crowmarsh: the land bears heavy cereal crops, and both the wheat and the barley are of the finest quality; it is particularly adapted to the growth of peas and beans, bears heavy crops of saintfoin and other fodder plants and potatoes. The area is 662 acres; rateable value, £1,687; the population in 1881 was 304.

Parish Clerk, James Luker.

CUDDESDON, or Cuddesden, is a parish in the hundred of Bullingdon, union of Headington, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Cuddesden, and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 1½ miles south from Wheatley railway station on the Great Western Railway and 6½ east-south-east from Oxford, situate on the river Thame. The church of All Saints is a fine cruciform building in the Norman and later styles, and consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, south and west porches, transepts, and an embattled central tower with a low rectangular turret at the north-west angle, and containing 6 bells, three of which are dated 1617 and the others respectively 1677, 1709 and 1795, and there is a sanctus bell dated 1748: the church appears to have been originally built about 1180, to which date belong the piers supporting the west doorway, a very good example of the latest Norman work, south doorway, the north transept walls, and one clerestory window, with other portions; to this Norman church, nave aisles were added about 1240, with arcades of three arches on either side: about 1350 the low side walls were raised and Decorated windows inserted and a south porch erected: the church is late Perpendicular, c. 1500, and has a good stained east window of four lights; the remaining windows bearing the emblazoned arms of various bishops of Oxford: on the south side are two rude openings, with pointed arches: the upper part of the tower, which is battlemented, with crocketed pinnacles at the angles, belongs together with the nave roof and some of the internal fittings to the reign of James I.: the font is plain and round, on a modern base: a lofty cross with a base of five steps stands in the churchyard. The register dates from the year 1541. The living is a vicarage, formerly annexed to the bishopric of Oxford, from which it was separated by Order in Council in 1852; gross yearly value £260, with residence, in the gift of the bishop of Oxford, and held since 1873 by the Rev. Charles Wellington Furse M.A. of Balliol College, Oxford, hon. canon of Christ Church and rural dean. Wilberforce Theological College, founded by the late bishop Wilberforce in April 1853, and opened June 15, 1854, for the training of candidates for holy orders, is a building in the Decorated style from designs by the late G. E. Street esq. R.A. and contains a dining-hall and rooms for about 30 students, to which a chapel, hall and other buildings were added in 1874 as a memorial to Bishop Wilberforce. Students must have been members of the universities and have passed their final examination; and such as enter from King's College, London, or Trinity College, Dublin, must have received the Divinity testimonium. Here is Cuddesdon Palace, the episcopal residence of the bishop of Oxford, a fine and commodious mansion surrounded by a small park, through which runs the river Thame; the chapel attached to the palace was erected by Bishop Wilberforce in 1846, and is in the Decorated style; all the windows are stained; the original palace was built in 1635 by Bishop Bancroft, but was burned in 1644 by order of Colonel William Legge, then governor of Oxford, lest it should afford shelter to the Parliamentary forces; in 1675-6 it was rebuilt by Bishop Fell, and finally completed by the same prelate in 1680. The Earl of Macclesfield is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are the Earl of Macclesfield and Queen's College, Oxford. The soil is loamy; subsoil, clay, gravel and sand. The chief crops are wheat, barley and beans. The entire area is 2,689 acres; rateable value of Cuddesdon, £2,198; the population in 1881 was 340.

CHIPPINGHURST is a hamlet. The population in 1881 was 15. The area is 140 acres; rateable value, £644.

Denton is a chapelry in the parish of Cuddesdon, ¾ miles south-west. The population in 1831 was 138; the area is 730 acres; rateable value, £1,095.

CULHAM is a parish partly in Berkshire, but principally in the county of Oxford, in the hundred of Dorchester, union of Abingdon, rural deanery of Cuddesdon, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 1½ miles south-south-east from Cuddesdon, bounded on the north, south and west by the river which separates it from Berks, with a station on the Great Western Railway, 50 miles from London and 1½ miles east of the village. Culham Bridge, connecting the parish with Abingdon, bears marks of the attack made by General Gage when that town was held for the Parliament by Col. Brown. The church of St. Paul was rebuilt in 1852 in the Early English style, and consists of chancel, nave, north aisle, south transept and a Perpendicular tower at the west end, erected in 1710: the chancel was rebuilt in 1873, at the cost of J. S. Phillips esq. and contains a small trefoil-headed recess, and a monument of Thomas Bury, of an ancient family of that name, of Bury Hall, in the county of Lancaster, who married Judith, daughter of Dr. Lawrence Humphrey and died in 1624: the arches of the south arcade, five in number, are Early English, with continuous mouldings; the north window, filled with 17th century shields, is singularly made to form part of a monument to Sir Edmund Cary knight, 1637, son of Henry Cary, Lord Hunsdon. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1638; marriages, 1639, and contains an entry, under date Oct. 10, 1666, of a sum of £1 3s. 8d. collected in aid of the sufferers by the Great Fire of London. The living is a discharged vicarage, gross yearly value £300 with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford, to which see the rectory was given by Queen Elizabeth. The vicarage has been held since 1874 by the Rev. Douglas Belcher Binney M.A. of Wadham College, Oxford. Culham training College, for schoolmasters, for the dioceses of Oxford and Gloucester, is a well-designed structure, chiefly of local stone in the Decorated Gothic style, and situated in an elevated position, about three-quarters of a mile west from the Culham station: it was erected in 1852 by the late Bishop Wilberforce, from designs by J. Clarke esq. at a cost of £20,000, of which £12,000 was raised by private subscription: the building, opened in 1853, is intended to contain 100 students, and has at present 85; it embraces, besides the students' apartments, a hall, chapel and principal's residence, and attached to the college is a middle-class school, which serves as a practising school for the students: seventy-five per cent. of the expenditure is defrayed by a government grant. The poor's allotment has been sold, and the proceeds amounting to over £2,000 invested in Consols, the interest of which is distributed in fuel. Good fishing may be had in Sutton Mill pool, and for pike below Culham lock. Culham House, the seat of John Shawe Phillips esq. J.P. is a handsome brick building. J. S. Phillips esq. is the owner of the rectorial property, including glebe of about 160 acres. George Herbert Morrell esq. who is lord of the manor, and J. S. Phillips esq. are the principal landowners. The soil is clay; subsoil, sand and clay. The chief crops are wheat and barley. The area is 1,590 acres in Oxford and 90 in Berks; rateable value, £4,759; the population in 1881 was 540.

CUXHAM is a village and parish 1½ miles north-west from Watlington, 4 south west from Tetsworth, and 6½ north-east from Wallingford, in the hundred of Ewelme, county court district of Wallingford, union of Henley, rural deanery of Aston and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. A stream passes through this parish, which turns several mills. The church of the Holy Rood is an ancient structure of stone, apparently rebuilt of old materials at the beginning of the eighteenth century, and consists of chancel, nave, porch and square tower containing 3 small bells; a Norman doorway with twisted shafts and sculptured capitals remains, and there is a plain round font of the same date, and on the north side some good Perpendicular windows; some good open benches are left, and there is a stone coffin on the south side: the church contains several tablets and a brass to John Gregory, 1506, and his wives Petronilla and Agnes, with 4 children; it was restored in the year 1850. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1578; marriages, 1577; burials, 1588. The living is a rectory, annexed by Order in Council to that of Easington, joint gross yearly value, including 24 acres of glebe, about £215 with residence, in the gift of Merton College, Oxford, and held since 1853 by the Rev. John David Pigott B.A. of that college. The Warden and fellows of Merton College are lords of the manor, and own most of the land, but there are some smaller owners. The soil is good loam; subsoil, rubble. The chief crops are wheat, beans, roots and barley. The area is 487 acres; rateable value, £1,069; the population in 1881 was 139.

DEDDINGTON, the "Town of the Dædings," formerly a market town, is a parish, head of a petty sessional division and polling place for the county, at the intersection of the high road from Oxford to Banbury with that from Buckingham to Chipping Norton, 70 miles from London, 16 from Oxford, 10 north-east from Woodstock and 6 south from Banbury, in the hundred of Wootton, county court district and union of Woodstock, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The Oxford and Birmingham railway passes 2 miles east of the town, with a station at Aynho (Northants). A station will also be at Adderbury, 2 miles north-west, on the direct Cheltenham and Banbury railway already constructed, but not yet opened. The river Cherwell separates the parish from Northamptonshire on the east and the river Swere bounds it on the north: the town consists chiefly of one long street, stretching along the summit of an acclivity. The church of SS. Peter and Paul, originally of the Decorated period, is now a building of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles north and south porches and a western tower surmounted by pinnacles and containing a clock and 7 bells, 6 of which were cast in 1791, and the small bell in 1869; in the chancel are three sedilia and a piscina, and a oak screen of excellent workmanship separates the chancel from the nave, which has arcades of four arches; the aisles are chiefly of the fourteenth century and in each remain steps formerly leading to the rood lofts of two chantry chapels; underneath the east end of the south aisle is a small low crypt, with groined roof, reached by steps from the outside, where also are two recessed stone arches, and on the inside, but in a different part of the wall, two similar arches, in one of which is a mutilated recumbent figure: there are also some remains of a stairway once conducting to a parvise over the south porch; a piscina and statue niche remain in the north aisle, the porch of which, of the fifteenth century, has fan tracery in the roof: the tower fell in March 1635, occasioning an estimated damage of £8,250, and letters patent were issued authorizing general collections for its restoration: the font, as appears from the registers, was placed in the church in 1663, various alterations were begun in the church during the vicariate of the Rev. W. C. Risley from 1840 onwards, and a continuance of the work was sanctioned by a vote of the vestry in 1858, but it was not completed until 1865, when the vestry, south porch and organ chamber were built and repairs effected, at a cost of £2,600, under the direction of the late G. E. Street esq. R.A. There are brasses in the church to a civilian, with half-effigy, c. 1370; John Higgins gent. 1641 and a brass inscription, mutilated and lying loose in the church chest with several others, to William Byllyng, merchant of the staple of Calais, 1533, and Elizabeth, his wife, 1522, this inscription, with effigies now lost, belongs to an altar tomb in the north aisle; there are other memorials to the families of Appleton, Cary, Churchill, Faulkner, Harris and Walden. The churchyard was enlarged in 1874. The register dates from the year 1631, and contains entries of marriages effected under the Act of 1656. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £195, in the gift of the Dean and Canons of Windsor, and held since 1878 by the Rev. Thomas Boniface M.A. of Jesus College, Cambridge, and surrogate. The Congregational chapel, situated in New street, and opened in May 1881, is a building of simple Early Gothic character, with a gabled central doorway and an octagonal turret above it, rising to a height of 60 feet: there are sittings for about 300 on the ground floor. There are also Wesleyan Reform (1849), and Primitive Methodists chapels. Sir Thomas Pope, founder of Trinity College, Oxford, was born here in 1508, and Sir William Scroggs, Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench, in 1623; Ethelmar or Audomar de Valence, half-brother to Henry III. was instituted vicar of Deddington in 1247: in 1260 he became Bishop of Winchester, but dying in the following year at Paris, his body was there buried in the Church of Ste. Geneviève, but his heart, at his own request, was immured at Winchester Cathedral on the north side of the choir, where there is an inscription, with the date 1261. Here is a factory for axletrees, which gives employment to a considerable number of men. A market was formerly held on Tuesday, which has become obsolete; and fairs were held on the last Tuesday in every month and on the twenty-first of August, the day following Old Michaelmas day, but the only one now held is on the 22nd of November: there are almshouses for four men and four women, with an endowment of £72 per annum. The feoffees' lands of 43 acres produce about £130 yearly, the balance of which, after providing for the inmates of the almshouses is divided between the National schools and the coal charity. Cartwright's charity of £6 yearly is for bread. This place and Hempton are of considerable antiquity, being mentioned in the Domesday Survey, amongst the possessions of Odo, Bishop of Bayeux, under the names of "Dadintone," and Hantone." On the east side of the town there was an ancient castle, the buildings of which were in existence in the thirteenth century and which extended over more than ten acres of ground; it is mentioned by Dugdale and Kennett as being a fortified place in the tenth of Richard I. (1198) and is considered to have been the place, called "Dathintone" by the chronicler Geoffrey le Baker, from which Piers de Gaveston, the favourite of Edward II. was taken to the scene of his execution on Blacklow Hill: the site of the castle is indicated by the embankment, which remains complete and encloses a level sward of six acres, now used as a place of meeting for local archery and cricket clubs: the ancient rectory house, built in the sixteenth century, the Plough Inn, in New street, and a house on the Clifton road, with the date 1647, have each some interesting portions of old work. The lords of the manors are the Dean and Canons of Windsor, Christ Church, Oxford and the Duchy of Lancaster. The principal landowners are Christ Church and New College, Oxford and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The land is arable and pasture; soil, light red land. The entire area of the parish is 3,990 acres; rateable value, £10,766; the entire population of the parish in 1881 was in 1,958.

Hempton is a small hamlet in the parish of Deddington, distant from the village a mile and a half west, on the road to Chipping Norton. Here is a school chapel, built at the cost of the late Rev. Wm. Wilson D.D. of Over Worton, consisting of nave with north aisle (used as a school) and a bell-cote containing 1 bell: the building is in the hands of the Rev. W. C. Risley, and the Rev. Canon Payne of Swalcliffe, as trustees, but is as yet unconsecrated. The Rev. Frederick Scobell Boissier M.A. of Queen's College, Oxford, assistant master of All Saints' school, Bloxham, is officiating minister. The poor's land of 7 acres, awarded in 1808, produces £20 yearly for fuel. The area is 970 acres; rateable value £1,464; the population in 1881 was 214.

Clifton is a chapelry and hamlet of Deddington, situated on the road from Buckingham to Chipping Norton, about a mile and a half east on the Northants border, close to which run the river Cherwell, the Oxford Canal and a branch of the Great Western railway. The church of St. James, consecrated July 10th, 1853, is a plain stone building, consisting of nave, with a bell turret containing 2 bells and was built chiefly at the expense of the late Rev. W. C. Risley M.A. for several years vicar of Deddington; the Rev. Frederick Loftie Cave M.A. of Pembroke College, Oxford, who resides at Bloxham, and the clergy of Deddington are the officiating ministers. The principal landowners are Christ Church, Oxford, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and W. C. Cartwright esq. M.P. The area is 670 acres; rateable value, £2,200; the population in 1881 was 260.

DORCHESTER, with OVERY and BURCOTT.

DORCHESTER is a parish which gives name to a hundred, in the union and county court district of Wallingford, rural deanery of Cuddesdon and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 4 miles east-by-south from Culham station on the Great Western railway, 8 south-east-by-south from Oxford and 6 east from Abingdon, on the western bank of the Thame, over which there is here a handsome stone bridge, built in 1813, of Headington stone, a few hundred yards below which the Thame and Isis form a junction and are thence called the Thames, which separates this county from Berkshire; the nearest bridge up the river is at Clifton Hampden, 2½ miles distant and down at Shillingford, 2¾ miles. Birinus, the apostle of the West Saxons here baptized Cynegils, king of the West Saxons A.D. 630, to whom Oswald, king of Northumberland, was godfather; these two kings gave the bishop this city in order that it might become the head of an episcopal see and he built and consecrated in the immediate neighbourhood various churches and subsequently baptized king Cuthred and king Cwichelm the son of Cynegils: Birinus died A.D. 650 and was buried at Dorchester, but was afterwards removed to Winchester. This see, after four hundred and sixty years' continuance, first as a West Saxon and afterwards as a Mercian bishopric, including from 965 the sees of Lindsey and Leicester, was translated to Lincoln by Remigius, 23rd bishop, in the time of William the Conqueror, A.D. 1075 at which time (says William of Malmsbury who flourished in that age), "Dorchester was a small and unfrequented town; yet the beauty and state of its churches, were very remarkable, as well for the ancient work as the present care taken of them." The great road to London, which lay through the town, being turned another way, so weakened and impoverished it that from the middle of the twelfth century it began rapidly to decay and from its former grandeur it is now reduced to a humble agricultural village. It derives its name from the Welsh dwr, water, and was called by the Romans "Durocina;" Bede terms it "Civitas Dorcinia"; and Leland named it "Hydropolis," the town of water. The Abbey church of SS. Peter and Paul is a spacious structure, singular and irregular in all its features, consisting of two collateral naves and choirs, a north choir aisle and a very short presbytery; and it exhibits portions of every ecclesiastical style and of transitions from one style to another: the exterior having no clerestory, appears long and low, with a massive embattled tower at the west end, containing 8 bells; but the interior, from the peculiarity of its arrangement, is striking and its proportions are unquestionably fine: the Decorated arcades of the choir are particularly elegant and there are two grand east windows: the north aisle is Transitional Early English, with an east window of the Decorated period and contains a niche for a lamp: the presbytery and south nave are of a date somewhat later than the Decorated period and the latter has a round altar platform with a sedile; beneath is a crypt about 11 by 8 feet in area: the chancel arch is Transition Norman, dating from 1180 and to this style belong also the north nave wall and its western and eastern bays: the east window, adorned with statues and pinnacles, is Transition Decorated and divided into two portions of three lights each, by a large plain buttress: the north or Jesse window, also Decorated, is of four lights, bearing imagery on the mullions, which are crossed by foliaged waving lines, intended to represent branches and the whole forms a genealogical tree springing from a figure of Jesse recumbent under the centre mullion, the crowning figure of Our Lord has been unfortunately destroyed: the south window of four lights, and Perpendicular character, is also a remarkable work; below it are three canopied sedilia and a water drain, also canopied and each of these has at the back a little window filled with twelfth-century glass and there are also beautiful remains of ancient glass in the east and other windows: in the south aisle is a curious fresco of the Crucifixion, of very early date: the font is a Norman work of lead, with figures of the apostles and is set on a stone base: in the lady chapel, on an altar tomb, is the recumbent figure of a crusader in chain mail, c. 1250 and east of this is another altar tomb, with a draped figure of the fourteenth century, variously described as a judge of the Stonor family, 1354 and as a female: the church also contains a fine recumbent knightly effigy of alabaster, also on an altar tomb and believed to represent a member of the Segrave family; and a stone incised with the figure of a bishop, inscribed to Roger, prior of Runton, Staffordshire, abbot of Dorchester and Suffragan bishop of Lydda, 1510; there are brasses to Sir John Drayton, c. 1411, with collar of SS, and his wife Isabella; Sir Richard Bewfforeste, abbot, 1510; a lady, c. 1490; William Tanner, Richard Beweforest and his wife Margaret, 1513; a shield of arms of Drayton, c. 1450; a merchant's mark and a matrix of John Sutton, abbot, 1349; in the lady chapel is also a memorial to Thomas Day, 1693, with a quaint verse; and there are mural monuments, with arms, to Mrs. Agnes Clarke, daughter of Lord Viscount Wenman, 1661; Charles, son of William Caster, 1668; Anne (Clarke) wife of Edward Carleton, of Penrith, 1669; and to Mary (Port) wife of John Granger, 1751: several stone coffins have been disinterred at different times, one of which contained remains wrapped in gilt leather, with a pewter chalice: the entrance to the church is on the south side by a spacious stone porch, with timbered roof, to the left of which, in the churchyard, is an ancient cross, the head of which has been restored: at the Dissolution in 1554, the cloisters, situated on the north side, chapter house and other abbey buildings were destroyed, but the church was purchased by Richard Bewforest for £140, and by him bequeathed to the parish: at the entrance to the churchyard is a good lych gate, overshadowed by a very fine chestnut tree: the whole building was restored under the superintendence of the late Sir G. Gilbert Scott R.A.; the work of restoration, begun under the auspices of the Architectural Society of Oxford in 1846, has already extended over several years and is still in progress. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1638, marriages, 1639. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £180 with residence and 2½ acres of glebe, in the gift of the Rev. Henry William Burrows, canon of Rochester and held since 1856 by the Rev. William Charles Macfarlane M.A. of Hertford College, Oxford and surrogate. The Catholic church, dedicated to St. Birinus, is an edifice in the Decorated style and was built and opened in 1849, at the sole expense of the late John Davey esq. who also devised his house for the use of the resident priest; it consists of chancel and nave, separated by a carved oak screen and south porch: the altar is of stone, supported by sculptured figures of the Evangelists; the east and other windows are stained. The Missionary College of St. Peter and St. Paul was founded October 30, 1873, through the exertions of the Rev. W. C. Macfarlane and is intended for the training of students for the mission work of the Church of England in foreign parts; the course of study, which extends over two or three years, includes the study of the Holy Scriptures in the original languages, classics, history, the careful and practical study of the Prayer Book and of theology, based on Pearson and Hooker; the buildings, consisting in part of converted dwelling houses, are in a quaint English Domestic style and besides rooms for students, include a chapel, library and refectory; the college is at present available for 15 students; the government is in the hands of a committee with the Rev. E. King D.D. canon of Christ Church, as visitor; Rev. Edward Clarence Paget M.A. Keble College, Oxford, principal; Rev. Thomas Barns B.A. Keble College, vice-principal. There is a Cottagers' Horticultural Society, established in 1869; shows are held annually and prizes offered for competition. Good fishing for barbel, pike, tench and perch may be had from Day's lock and weir as far as Shillingford. Dunch's charity of £33 yearly is for distribution in money and Sir G. Fettiplace's of £10 for bread. At a short distance from the town are the remains of an ancient Roman camp, called Dike Hill, consisting of a double intrenchment about three quarters of a mile long; the banks being in general about 20 yards apart and 20 feet in extreme height, a considerable portion on the west side, has, however, been recently levelled by the plough; south of the bank is a circular field, near which stands a farm house called "Bishop's Court," occupying the site of the ancient palace. Sinodun Hill, in the neighbourhood, is an ancient British work; and in the town and its vicinity coins of gold, silver and brass, from Julius Cæsar to Heraclius, have been plentifully met with; in 1731 a small inscribed altar was found here and in 1736 a ring of gold, inscribed with the date of the consecration of St. Birinus A.D. 636. The market has long been discontinued, but there is still an annual pleasure fair on Easter Tuesday. Sir John Christopher Willoughby bart. is lord of the manor and the principal landowner. The soil is alluvial; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, oats, and barley. The entire area of the parish is 3,194 acres; rateable value, £5,026; the population in 1881 was 813.

OVERY is a hamlet in the parish, half a mile south from the town, on the east of the Thame. The population is returned with Dorchester.

BURCOTT is a hamlet in this parish, in the union of Abingdon, a mile and a half north-west from the town, on the river Isis. The area is 648 acres; rateable value, £1,346; the population in 1881 was 199. The school here is licensed by the Bishop for Divine service, which is held every Sunday and Wednesday evening.

DRAYTON (near Banbury) is a parish and village in the hundred of Bloxham, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 2 miles north-west from Banbury and 25 north-west from Oxford. The church of St. Peter is a small structure of the fourteenth century, and consists of clerestoried nave and aisles, all of good Decorated work, and a low western tower of modern date; the east window, of three lights, is stained: there is a piscina in the chancel and in the south aisle two sedilia and a piscina: there are various memorials of the Grevilles, who once had a mansion here; these include an altar-tomb, the upper slab of which is incised with figures of a knight and lady, and the arms of Greville impaling Arden; and above, a scroll, with inscription in Latin, to Lodowick Greville, 1438, and Margaret (Arden), his wife; in the south aisle is a similar tomb, with incised figure and inscription to William Greville, eldest son of the preceding, 1440; beneath a recessed arch, near the north door, is a stone sarcophagus, with carved foliage on the lid: the nave is separated from the aisles by arcades of three plain arches on either side: the font is plain and round. The register dates from the 25th July 1577. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £260 with residence and 80 acres of glebe, let for £249, in the gift of and held since 1878 by the Rev. Percival Walsh Jordan. There are charities, amounting to upwards of £30, distributed annually. Roman coins of the later Emperors have been found here. There was formerly a cross in the centre of the village, which remained till about 1828. Earl de la Warr, who is lord of the manor, and Col. North M.P. are the principal landowners. The soil is red loam; subsoil, clay. The crops are general. The area is 880A. 2R. 37P.; rateable value, £1,729; the population in 1881 was 162.

DRAYTON ST. LEONARD (near Wallingford), so called to distinguish it from Drayton, near Banbury, is a parish in the hundred of Dorchester, Abingdon union and county court district, rural deanery of Cuddesdon and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 5 miles north from Wallingford, 7 miles east from Abingdon, on the western bank of the Thame and 2 miles from its confluence with the Isis. The church of St. Leonard, a small and plain building of mixed styles, consists of chancel, nave, a chapel on the north side and a wooden belfry over the western gable, containing 3 bells, the oldest is simply inscribed "Sancta Katerina ora pro nobis," the other two are dated 1603 and 1625: the chancel is Decorated and has an east window of three lights: in one of the north windows is a fragment of fifteenth century glass, representing a bishop and said to be intended for St. Leonard: on the south side is a piscina, and opposite to it traces of an aumbry, near which are two mutilated corbel heads; the chancel arch is quite plain: the north and south doorways are Norman, and there is one window of this date, but the others are either Early English or Perpendicular and the font is of the latter period: the church, restored in 1859, under the superintendence of the late G. E. Street esq. R.A. when the chancel was almost entirely rebuilt, at the expense of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford; the roof of the nave was also opened, the gallery taken away and the high pews replaced by open sittings; the church was re-opened by the bishop of the diocese on the 13th of February 1860: an account of monuments and arms in this church, chiefly of the Draytons, is found in Wood's MS. D. 14. The register dates from the year 1568. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £140 with residence, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, and held since 1858 by the Rev. Arthur James Williams M.A. of Christ Church and surrogate. Charities: Mary Spyer, by will in 1697, left a rent-charge of £5 yearly for apprenticing a boy or girl of this parish, but the parishioners do not appear to have applied for this charity since 1790; there is also a small estate, of the yearly value of £7, which is devoted to the repairs of the church, church fence and gates of the churchyard. The rights of fishing in the Thame stream in this parish are held by Sir John Willoughby bart. and H.Betteridge esq. Sir John Christopher Willoughby bart. who is lord of the manor, Trinity College, Oxford, H. Betteridge esq. and the trustees of the Hazeley poor are the principal landowners. The soil is generally friable; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats, beans and roots. The area is 1,260 acres; rateable value, £2,145; the population in 1881 was 287.

DUCKLINGTON, with the Chapelry of HARDWICK, is a parish 1½ miles south from Witney station on the East Gloucestershire branch of the Great Western railway, and 12 west from Oxford, in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situate on the river Windrush. The church of St. Bartholomew is an ancient but fine building of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, nave, aisles, porches and an embattled western tower, of Transition Norman and Perpendicular work, containing a clock and 6 bells; the chancel is Early English, lighted by five lancets with wide splay and one three-light east window, of Perpendicular date, and has good Early English sedile, piscina and locker; the nave is divided from the aisles by an arcade of three bays on either side; those on the south side being Transition Norman, supported on cylindrical piers, and those on the north side very fine Decorated; the north aisle has two sepulchral recesses with very rich Decorated ogee canopies; above, under the cornice of the aisle, is a series of panels, sculptured with mutilated figures, and representing the Salutation, the Nativity and the Annunciation, and in the tracery of the east window, the Coronation of the Virgin; there is an ancient Norman font; the reredos, given by the late rector, Dr. Farley, is of oak, carved in three panels, and represents in the centre "The Last Supper," on the left "Christ before Pilate," and on the right "The Scourging at the Pillar;" in 1872 the church was renovated and restored at a cost of £325, raised by subscription, the work in the chancel being carried out at the cost of the present rector; it has been reseated with open benches: in the chancel is a memorial to Dr. Mainwaring Hammond, prebendary of Winchester, and a former rector, 1731; and Phillis his wife, 1716; he was one of the ejected fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford, in the reign of James II. and the first incumbent presented to this living by that society; a slab in the nave is inscribed to Matthew Prior, 1718. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1550; marriages, 1581; burials, 1580; and contain one entry of a supra-centenarian, "old widow Knapp," bur. 10th March, 1727, aged 105. An index to the registers, from the beginning to the end of 1880, has been compiled by the rector, and printed in the transactions of the North Oxfordshire Archæological Society, 1881. The living is a rectory with the parochial chapelry of Hardwick annexed, net yearly value £480, with 37A. of glebe and residence, in the gift of the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford, and held since 1870 by the Rev. William Dunn Macray M.A. of Magdalen College, Oxford, F.S.A. and late sub-librarian of the Bodleian library. Here is a small Baptist chapel. Mrs. Ann Sammon's charity for Ducklington consists of the interest on £105 11S. 4d. Reduced Three per Cents. and is distributed in bread and coal; Lydall's charity for Hardwick amounts to about £15 yearly, derived from rents of a cottage, garden and allotments, which is distributed in bread on Christmas day, Easter day and Whit Sunday. Mrs. Strickland, of Cokethorpe Park, is lady of the manor and principal landowner of Ducklington; The soil and subsoil are clay and gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans, turnips &c. The population in 1881 was—Ducklington 435, Hardwick 115; the area is—Ducklington, 1,868 acres; rateable value, £2,816; Hardwick, 649 acres; rateable value, £873. A detached part of Hardwick, in which there is a farmhouse and cottage, adjoins Yelford.

HARDWICK parochial chapelry, which is a separate parish for civil purposes, is situated 1½ miles south-east on the west bank of the river Windrush, and consists of four farm-houses and a few cottages. The church of St. Mary the Virgin, standing in Cokethorpe Park, a little east of the mansion, is mentioned in early records so far back as 1376, where it is called the little church "Ecclesiola" or chapel of Cokethorpe, and is said to have been long annexed to the church of Ducklington: it is a small stone building, consisting of chancel, nave, north aisle, porch and a small tower at the north-west angle of the nave; it has an ancient Norman font and in the porch are three chained books, "The Imitation of Christ," "The Whole Duty of Man" and "Nelson's Feasts and Fasts;" in 1874 it was restored and enlarged by the addition of the aisle, at a cost of £650, raised by subscriptions chiefly contributed by the principal landowners; it will seat 100 persons. Here is a small Baptist chapel. St. John's College, Oxford, is lord of the manor and with Wadham College the principal landowner.

COKETHORPE HOUSE, the seat of Mrs. Strickland, built by Simon, first viscount Harcourt, about 1711, is a fine old mansion situated about 1 mile south-east of Ducklington church, amid a beautiful park of 170 acres, and was for some time the residence of the poet Gay: it was sold in 1755 to Maximilian Western esq. whose daughter and co-heiress married Walter Strickland esq.; it contains a choice collection of valuable paintings, including the celebrated picture of the family of Sir Thomas More, said to be by Holbein, and "Walter Strickland, ambassador at the Hague, created a peer by Cromwell," a copy from a Vandyke at Boynton; the dining-room is lined with fine oak panelling and has fluted oak pillars with elaborate caps and bases, some of which were given by Queen Anne; the park and pleasure grounds are planted with ornamental shrubs and numerous groups of stately forest trees.

ELSFIELD, in Domesday "Esefeld," is a parish in the hundred of Bullingdon, union of Headington, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Islip and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 3¼ miles north-north-east from Oxford. A church was consecrated here in July, 1273, by Reginald, bishop of Cloyne, acting for the bishop of Lincoln. The church of St. Thomas à Becket is a small building, pleasantly situated on a hill, and chiefly in the Early English style: it consists only of chancel and nave, south porch and a bell-cot on the western gable containing 2 bells; the chancel has a Decorated east window of three lights, and on either side three elegant lancets, and retains its piscina: on the north wall of the nave are two large arches and a smaller one, at one time forming the arcade of a now destroyed aisle; the chancel arch is Transition Norman, with a screen of Jacobean date: the pulpit is of the same period and retains an hour glass: the font is a plain Norman work, circular, and on a simple base: in the chancel is a brass inscribed to Michael Pudsey esq. 1645, with his arms inserted in the middle of an ancient gravestone brought from Ensham Abbey, round the margin of which is the following inscription in black letters:

Hic: jacet: Frater: Johannes: de: Chiltenham: quondam: Abbas: hujus: loci: cujus: anime: propitietur: deus:

John de Chiltenham was Abbot of Ensham from 1316 to 1330. The register dates from the year 1686. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £256 with residence, in the gift of Col. North M.P. of Wroxton Abbey, Banbury, and held since 1878 by the Rev. Thomas Langhorne M.A. of St. John's College, Oxford. Brett's charity of £10 yearly is for fuel. This lordship was held in the time of Henry VII. by the Pudseys, a Yorkshire family, the last resident here being Sir George Pudsey kt. recorder of Oxford in 1685, who sold the manor and estate, of about £1,200 a year, to Lord North, for £25,000. Col. North M.P. is lord of the manor and sole landowner. The soil is clay; subsoil, clay and sand. The chief crops are wheat and beans. The area is 1,200 acres; rateable value, £1,901; and the population in 1871 was 159 and in 1881 was 170.

Parish Clerk, Thomas Basson.

EMMINGTON (or EMINGTON) is a small parish in the hundred of Lewknor, union and county court district of Thame, rural deanery of Aston and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 3 miles south-east from Thame, on the east side of the road leading thence to Chinnor and on the borders of Bucks. The church of St. Nicholas is an ancient building in the Decorated style and consists of chancel and nave, and a rudely built saddle-backed tower containing 3 bells, which, from being in the shape of a parallelogram and having no entrance from the exterior, presents a rather singular appearance. The register dates from the year 1539. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £160, with residence and 2 acres of glebe, in the gift of P. J. D. Wykeham esq. and held since 1872 by the Rev. Greville Henry Lambert M.A. of Magdalen College, Oxford. P. J. D. Wykeham esq. is lord of the manor and sole landowner. The soil and subsoil are principally clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans and oats. The area is 726 acres; rateable value, £1,145; and the population in 1871 was 83.

Parish Clerk, Daniel Varney.

ENSTONE, situated on the river Glyme, is an extensive parish, consisting of the hamlets of CHURCH ENSTONE, NEAT ENSTONE, LIDSTONE, CHALFORD, CLEVELEY, GAGINGWELL and RADFORD, in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. Church Enstone is 15 miles north-west from Oxford and 5 south-east from Chipping Norton. The church of St. Edward the Confessor is a very ancient structure, originally dedicated to St. Kenelm; it was rebuilt and extensively added to at various times, notably in or about the years 1170, 1280 and 1320, and it is most probable that at the last named date the re-dedication took place: the church now consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, south porch (over which is a chamber) and an embattled western tower of Perpendicular date, containing a clock and 6 bells, all re-cast in 1831: the existing church encloses the site of the more ancient church of St. Kenelm, bounded on the east by the present church, at the end of which portions of its eastern wall still remain: the east window of three lights is stained and has the date 1637: the nave is separated from the aisles by arcades of four arches on either side, those on the north side being Early English, on alternate round and octagonal piers, while the south arcade is Transition Norman: the south aisle retains two piscinæ, a plain stone altar with reredos, c. 1420, and an effigy of painted stone to Stevens Wisdom, 1633: the south doorway, the oldest portion of the church now entire, is fine Norman, with bold moulding; the porch is vaulted and has in its east wall a warden bracket, with an iron ring and chain attached to it: the tower is stunted and heavy, being only 53 feet in height; it occupies eastward one entire bay of the original nave, destroyed in order to acquire the necessary breadth in that direction: in the nave are floor stones inscribed to John Beckingham S.T.P. vicar, 1686; Daniel Stacy D.D. vicar, 1721; and Abigail, wife of the Rev. W. Wilcockson, curate, 1734; on a corner buttress of the porch is a marble slab to John Naylor, vicar, 1704; and in the churchyard is the tomb of the Rev. George Sheppard, vicar, 1784; and Hannah, his wife, 1793: the communion plate includes a cup with cover, 9½ inches in height and dated 1580; a silver paten dated 1672; a silver flagon given by the present Viscount and Viscountess Dillon in 1867, and a pewter flagon with cover: the church was carefully restored in 1856 under the direction of the late G. E. Street esq. R.A. when the western gallery, erected in 1700–1, was removed, the south aisle roofed anew, a new stone pulpit and a reading desk introduced, and other repairs, including that of the font, effected; the chancel was refitted at the same time by the rectors, at a cost of £50. The register dates from the year 1558, but up to the year 1603 appear to be transcribed from some earlier record; there are also overseers' accounts from 1660 to 1773, and a church book containing the accounts of the charity estates from 1700 to 1831; besides a valuable collection of parochial charters and other documents, about 50 in number, and dating from A.D. 1295 to A.D. 1588. The rectory formerly belonged to Winchcombe Abbey, in Gloucestershire, but is now the property of Christ Church, Oxford; it is impropriate and possesses the great tithes, commuted for an annual rent-charge of £1,244, besides a glebe of 53 acres. The living is a vicarage, possessing a rent charge of £300, an endowment from the rectory of £16, a glebe of 27 acres let for £40 and residence, in the gift of Viscount Dillon and held since 1878 by the Rev. Francis Constantine Arthur Dillion B.A. of Hertford College, Oxford. The vicarage house was erected in 1836 on a site given by the late Viscount Dillon, who also contributed towards its erection. There are two valuable estates belonging to the parish for charitable uses, the first, of 68 acres of land with cottages, and known as "the Church Estate," and yearly value about £151 being for the repair of the church; the other, called "Marten's," or "the Beef Estate" of 7A. 2R. value £16 yearly being for distribution in bread. The ancient rectory barn, still standing, bears an almost obliterated inscription in Latin recording its erection by Walter de Wyniforton, abbot of Winchcombe, in 1382, at the petition of Robert Mason, bailiff of this place. The Cromlech, called the "Eutastan," or the Giants' Stone, is an ancient Druidical remain, consisting of three stones, one of which, still remaining upright, is nearly 11 feet high, 7 feet wide, and about 3 feet 6 inches in thickness, from which the name Enstone is derived. Viscount Dillon is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are Brasenose and Oriel Colleges, Viscount Dillon, the Rev. Edward Marshall, Albert Brassey esq. J.P. and William Faulkner esq. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, brash rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley and roots. The entire area of the parish is 6,177 acres; rateable value, £9,176; the population in 1881 was 1,102.

Neat Enstone, sometimes called ROAD ENSTONE, from the circumstance of the high road to Birmingham and Worcester passing through it, has its name Neat from the herds of neat cattle that in ancient times were depastured on its open fields and commons; it is half a mile south from Church Enstone. Here were once some famous waterworks with artificial grottoes and fountains, now destroyed, constructed in 1636 by Thomas Bushell, secretary to Lord Bacon, and visited with much pomp by Charles I. and his Queen Henrietta Maria while resident in the neighbourhood. There is a small Wesleyan chapel here; a Baptist chapel at Cleveley, erected in 1871; a Catholic chapel with an orphanage at Radford and a Primitive Methodist chapel at Lidstone.

CLEVELEY is one mile east from Church Enstone and contains an ancient house of the thirteenth century belonging to the church estate; RADFORD is 2½ east, and until 1624 had a chapel; both these places are on the Glyme.

GAGINGWELL, two miles north-east, contains the remains of an ancient cross, consisting of a portion of the shaft, raised on three steps; the spring or well, from which this hamlet derives its name, is said never to fail even in the driest seasons; at LIDSTONE, 1½ miles west, in a field called "Roundhill," above the village, is an ancient tumulus; and at CHALFORD, 3 miles distant, and also on the Glyme, there are three of these; Chalford had also once a chapel.

Parish Clerk, Andrew Clark.

EWELME is a beautifully situated village and parish 10 miles north-west from Henley, 4 east from Wallingford and 3 south-west from Watlington, in the hundred of Ewelme, union and county court district of Wallingford, rural deanery of Aston and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Mary, situated on elevated ground, is a fine edifice of the Perpendicular period, rebuilt by William de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk, in the fifteenth century, and consists of chancel with St. John's chapel on the south, and vestry and aisle on the north, clerestoried nave, aisles, north, and south porches, and an embattled western tower containing 5 bells and a clock: the chancel of two bays is separated from the nave by a rood-screen, and has on the south side a chapel dedicated to St. Luke with a carved roof of Spanish chestnut, between this chapel and the chancel is a panelled altar tomb to the memory of Thomas Chaucer, son of the poet and Matilda his wife, who are buried here; on the slab of Purbeck marble forming the top of the tomb are figures in brass of a knight and his lady with four shields of Roet and Burghersh, and on the sides are arranged 20 other shields; a restored inscription surrounds the upper slab with the dates 1433 & 1436; the tomb was repaired and some of the mutilated shields replaced in 1843 by Dr. Kidd: more to the east, in an opening between the chapel and chancel, is a large high tomb of alabaster to Alice, Duchess of Suffolk, who died at Ewelme, May 20th, 1475, with a full-length recumbent effigy, coroneted, and wearing the Garter on the left arm; the tomb is surrounded with canopies enclosing figures of angels bearing shields, and within the lower stage, which is open and fitted with panelled tracery, is an emaciated figure of the Duchess, wrapped in a shroud; above rises an elaborately carved flat canopy, divided by four pinnacles, and adorned with nine figures of angels and a floriated cresting: in the north aisle is a rough slab of Purbeck marble, said to mark the place of interment of Michael, third Earl of Suffolk, slain at Agincourt, 25 October, 1415; and in the chancel a mutilated inscription to Samuel Everard A.M. rector of Swyncombe, 1688; and near it a memorial to William Duke A.M. also rector of Swyncombe, 1695: in the centre of the nave is a monumental slab to Thomas Broke esq. serjeant at arms to Henry VIII. 1518 and Anne (Bulstrode) his wife, with effigies of both, inscription, and four shields of arms; there are other brasses to John Bradstane, rector, 1458; Henry Morecote, rector, 1467; and William Branwhait, master of the almshouse, 1498, all three with demi-effigies; and to John Saynysbery, rector, 1454; Simon Brayles, chaplain to Alice, Duchess of Suffolk, and rector of Chidsey, Somerset, 1469; Thomas Vernon esq. 1471; Robert Esmund esq. 1474; Henry Lee and Alice his wife, 1497; John Bacheman, 1513; Anne, wife of John Froste, 1585, with eight English verses; and Catherine Palmer, 1599, with children: the whole church is in very good repair, having been restored through the exertions and partly at the expense of a former rector, Dr. Burton: the preservation of this church from mutilation when the Parliamentary army lay around Oxford was due to Col. Francis Martyn, who resided at Ewelme Manor, and forbade any person to enter the church except for service on Sunday; his monument is in the chancel. The register dates from the year 1599 and the churchwardens' books from 1692. The living is a rectory, commutation value £708, but charged with repayment of £700 borrowed from the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty for the purchase of land thrown into the grounds; gross yearly value £550, with residence; it was annexed by King James I. to the Regius Professorship of Divinity, Oxford, but was severed from it by Act of Parliament A.D. 1871, and is now in the gift of the Crown, but must be held by a graduate of Oxford; the Rev. William Wigan Harvey B.D. of King's College, Cambridge and Oriel College, Oxford, late fellow of King's, has been rector since 1872. There are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels; the former has an endowment founded by deed in 1825. William de la Pole, first Duke and fourth Earl of Suffolk, and Alice his wife, daughter of Thomas Chaucer, of this place, by royal license dated July 3, 1437, founded an almshouse, with a grammar school attached, and endowed them originally with 100 marks (£66 13s. 4d.), but afterwards instead thereof with the manors of Marsh

Gibbon, in Bucks; Ramridge, in Hants; and Conock, in Wilts; there are now belonging to this charity 4,568 acres of land and houses producing annually £1,625; the mastership of the almshouse is at present held by Henry Wentworth Acland M.D., F.R.S. as Regius Professor of Medicine in Oxford; and there are thirteen inmates, the appointment of whom is now in the patronage of the Earl of Macclesfield; a new scheme for the management and regulation of the almshouse was directed by the Court of Chancery in May 1860; the buildings form a quadrangle surrounded within by a cloister, from which a flight of steps leads immediately into the tower of the church; there is at present no grammar master, the office not having been filled up since the death of the Rev. Mr. Faithful in 1866, but the trustees of the almshouse purchased in 1857 certain lands, formerly the site of a royal palace here in which Queen Elizabeth occasionally resided, with the intention of erecting upon it buildings suitable for the grammar school; the yearly income attached to which is £250. Near to this spot is Ewelme park, once a seat of the Earls of Essex, now a farm house; Weedon's charity of £1 12s. is for bread. Here is a remarkably fine spring, forming a rapid stream which empties itself into the Thames, and which (from the Saxon word "ea" signifying a spring of water) gives its name to the place. The Earl of Macclesfield is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are Thomas Taylor esq. John Lane Franklin esq. and Mr. William Newton. The soil is chalk and gravel on galt. The chief crops are wheat and other cereals and artificial grasses. There is very little pasture or natural grass. The area is 2,376 acres; rateable value, £2,803; the population in 1831 was 602.

Parish Clerk, Thomas Stroudley.

EYNSHAM (A. S. EGONESHAM), is a parish, village and station on the Witney and East Gloucestershire branch of the Great Western railway, situated on the high road from Oxford to Witney and Cheltenham, in Wootton hundred, Bampton East petty sessional division, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 64 miles from London by road and 70 by rail, 5 east from Witney and 6 north-west from Oxford; the river Isis over which there are two bridges, separates the parish from Berkshire, and the Evenlode river bounds it on the east. The church of St. Leonard is a structure of mixed styles, mostly Perpendicular, consisting of chancel, nave with clerestory, aisles, north porch, with parvise and a western tower of four stages, with embattled parapet at the end of the north aisle, containing a clock and 5 bells: the chancel is Transitional from Early English to Decorated with an east window of three lights: the north aisle is Perpendicular and divided from the nave by an arcade of four Perpendicular arches, on clustered piers, the fifth or westernmost bay being occupied by the tower: the south aisle is in Transitional Decorated and Perpendicular styles, with a similar arcade of five arches, but is considerably wider than the north aisle, this being but 6 ft. 7 in.; while the south aisle is nearly 25 feet in width; at the east end of the latter is a piscina and two aumbries: the nave is Early Perpendicular, with a clerestory lighted by five two-light windows on either side: the tower is of the same date, and has a stair turret at the north-east angle: the font is also Perpendicular and is raised on three steps: there are a number of mural monuments, three to the Rogers family; in the chancel is a brass to Edward Stanley, 1632, and a slab to James Stanley, 1611. Opposite the north side of the church stand the shaft and base of a fine village cross, with figures under canopies round the shaft, and a foliated capital. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1664; marriages, 1665; burials, 1653. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £370 with residence, in the gift of the present vicar and Mrs. Bricknell and held since 1845 by the Rev. William Simcox Bricknell M.A. of Worcester College, Oxford, and surrogate. The Duke of Marlborough is the lay impropriator. Here are Baptist (built in 1815) Catholic Apostolic and Methodist chapels. St. Thomas' charity consists of about £71 yearly, which is distributed in bread to the poor. In the year 1800, when the waste lands of this parish were enclosed under the award, land called "Foxley farm" was allotted to the poor in lieu of the right they had of cutting fuel from the common at certain seasons; this land now produces £83 yearly, distributed in coal to the poor at Christmas. John Bartholomew in the year 1700 left £350, which has been increased from time to time by sundry benefactions, for the purchase of land, the rents of which are applied to the education of 12 children, and the surplus of the annual income in apprenticing the boys (now taught in the Board and National schools), as the funds allow. In 1858 Gas Works were established here, with a capital of £2,000 raised in £5 shares. A Benedictine Abbey formerly existed in this parish, situated near the river Thames; it was founded by Athelmar, Earl of Devon, a man of great esteem, under King Ethelred, before A.D. 1005 and dedicated to SS. Mary and Benedict and All Saints; portions of the buildings, which included a church with two western towers, were remaining until 1843, and the site may still be traced in a meadow to the west of the church; at the dissolution in 1539 there were 16 monks, and its revenues were estimated at £441; Anthony Kitchen, the last abbot, was made Bishop of Llandaff. Eynsham Hall, about 3½ miles distant and near the north-west boundary, is a large mansion, situated in a park of over 700 acres, embellished with some fine timber, a choice collection of ornamental shrubs; and a lake of about 16 acres; the house, seated on high ground, commands a capital view of woodland scenery and is the seat of James Mason esq. J.P. the lord of the manor. The landowners are James Mason esq. J.P. the Duke of Marlborough, Mrs. Malcolm, Mr. Joseph Druce, and several smaller owners. The soil is various, gravel, loam and stiff clay; subsoil, gravel and clay. The crops are the usual cereals and roots. The area is 5,060 acres; rateable value, £10,663; and the population in 1831 was 2,076.

BARNARD GATE is a hamlet 2 miles west-north-west on the high road to Witney.

LITTLE FARINGDON, an ecclesiastical parish formed in 1864 from the civil parish of Langford, is a small village situated on the river Leach, which is the boundary of the counties of Oxon and Gloucester, about a mile north from Lechlade station, 8 north-west from Faringdon and 1¼ south-west from Langford, of which parish it was formerly a hamlet; it is in the union and county court district of Faringdon, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The parish formerly was in Berkshire, but by the Acts 2 & 3 William IV. cap. 64, and 7 & 8 Vict. cap. 61, it was annexed to Oxfordshire. When King John founded the abbey of Beaulieu, in the New Forest, he endowed it with his estates at Faringdon and part of Langford, which thus gained the name of Little Faringdon. The church (dedication uncertain) is a stone building in the Transition Norman and later styles, and consists of chancel, nave, north aisle, south porch and a bell turret at the west end containing two bells: the chancel contains a good Decorated aumbry and a foliated bracket over the communion table: there is also a pulpit, with desk, of good Jacobean character: a concealed arch on the south side of the nave indicates the former existence of a chantry chapel; the font is Perpendicular and there are many windows of this date; the communion plate, includes an ancient chalice, c. 1500. The register dates from 1864, entries anterior to this date being included in the register of Langford, which dates from 1538. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £150 with residence and 1 acre of glebe, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford, and held since 1864 by the Rev. William Fulford Adams M.A. of Exeter College, Oxford. Lord De Mauley is lord of the manor and sole landowner, and resides at Langford House. The soil is mixed; subsoil, clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and beans. The area of the parish is 1,123 acres; rateable value, £1,558; and the population in 1881 was 124.

FIFIELD is a parish on the border of Gloucestershire, situated on the Evenlode, in the hundred of Chadlington, Chipping Norton union and county court district, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 4½ miles north-west from Burford and 4 from Shipton or Chipping Norton junction stations. The church of St. John the Baptist is an ancient structure, chiefly of Early English date and consists of chancel, nave, south porch and a small octagonal western tower of Early English date, with a broach spire and containing 3 bells: the chancel, recently restored by the rector, is Early English work and has a Decorated east window of three lights, filled with stained glass, also by the rector: the nave was restored in 1840, and has one stained window, and an Early English bellcot on the eastern gable, with the sanctus bell in its original position: the font is a Perpendicular work. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1714; marriages, 1754; burials, 1712. The living is a rectory, with that of Idbury annexed, joint gross yearly value £260 with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1843 by the Rev. John Mayow Talmage M.A. of Christ Church, Oxford. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The Countess Talbot's charity of £4 yearly is for clothing. Bray's charity, left by Jane Bray, of Great Barrington, Gloucestershire, in 1715, provides clothing for two poor people, and £1 yearly for distribution in money. William Godfree esq. who is lord of the manor and John Chambers esq. are principal landowners. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats, turnips &c. The area is 1,148 acres; rateable value, £1,262, the population in 1881 was 246.

FILKINS is a scattered village and ecclesiastical parish formed in 1850 out of the civil parish of Bradwell, 4 miles north-east from Lechlade, 3 west from Alvescot station and about the same distance from Lechlade station, 6 west from Bampton and 10 south-west from Witney, in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, on the Gloucestershire border. The church of St. Peter, built in 1857, is a structure of stone, in a modern style of Gothic, and consists of chancel, nave, north aisle and a bell-turret containing 2 bells; it has two stained windows. The register dates from the year 1857. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £101 with residence and glebe let for £22, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford, and now vacant. Here are Congregational and Primitive Methodist chapels. Filkins Hall, an ancient manorial mansion, the property of Capt. J. C. Campbell R.N. was destroyed by fire in May, 1876, and is still in ruins. The principal landowners are Capt. Campbell R.N. and W. H. Fox esq. J.P. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, an inferior oolite. The chief crops are the usual cereals. The area is 1,730 acres; rateable value, £2,483; the population in 1881 was 590.

FINMERE (or FINMORE) is a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Brackley, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situated on the river Onse, which divides it from Water Stratford, in Buckinghamshire, 7 miles north-east from Bicester and 4 west from Buckingham. Part of the village of Finmere extends into the parish of Tingewick, Bucks. The church of St. Michael, which has been partly rebuilt, is a plain structure of mixed styles, and consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, north aisle and a battlemented western tower of the Decorated period containing 3 bells: the east window of three lights, and others in the chancel, are Decorated, but the chancel arch is modern; the font is cylindrical and plain. The register dates from the year 1566, the earliest volume being a transcript in Latin. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £370 with residence, in the gift of William Ashwell esq. and held since 1866 by the Rev. Seymour Ashwell M.A. of Christ Church, Oxford. The charities for distribution amount to £19 yearly; there are also annual sums of £4 10s. for education and £4 for apprenticing. The principal landowners are Merton College, Oxford, F. Barrs esq. of Haydon hill, Dudley, Mr. Henry Painter and Major Hall. The soil consists of stiff clay, gravel and stone brash, a small portion only in pasture, the remainder arable. The area is 1,542 acres; rateable value, £2,200; the population in 1871 was 327.

FINSTOCK and FAWLER are townships in the civil parish of Charlbury, and in 1860 were formed into an ecclesiastical district. Finstock is 2½ miles from Charlbury station on the Oxford and Worcester railway, 5 north from Witney and 6 west from Woodstock, in the hundred of South Banbury, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The river Evenlode flows between Finstock and Fawler and is here crossed by a bridge. The church of the Holy Trinity is a small rectangular building of stone, erected in 1841 on a site given by Lord Churchill and consists simply of a nave and turret with 1 bell; the interior was much improved and beautified in 1876: there is a stained window to the memory of the late Lord Churchill and a smaller one on each side to other members of that family; the pulpit is a memorial to the late Dowager Lady Churchill. The register dates from the year 1842. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £105 with residence, in the gift of St. John's College, Oxford, and held since 1863 by the Rev. Alfred Redifer M.A. of St. Mary Hall, Oxford. There is a small Wesleyan chapel. The church close produces £4 yearly and there are charities of £3 for educational purposes and £2 for distribution in money. Lord Churchill is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, brash rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley and roots. The area is 822 acres; rateable value, £1,876; the population (including Fawler) in 1881 was 599.

FOREST HILL is a parish in the hundred of Bullingdon, union of Headington, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Islip and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 1½ miles north-west from Wheatley station on the Great Western railway and 4 east-north-east from Oxford. The village extends into three parishes, Forest Hill, Cuddesdon and Stanton St. John. The church of St. Nicholas is a plain edifice, chiefly of Transition Norman date, and consists of chancel and nave under a single roof, and at the western end a lofty gabled bell cot, pierced for 2 bells, but having at present only 1; this bell-gable appears to be part of the original Transition work, but is supported by two later buttresses of enormous projection, one extending westward 11 and the other 14 feet: there is a modern east window of three lancets and a good Perpendicular west window: the outer doorway of the porch is an elegant example of Transition Norman: from its position on the summit of a hill, its ivy-mantled walls and singular bell-cot, the church forms a very picturesque object: it was originally consecrated 6th July, 1273, by Reginald, Bishop of Cloyne, acting for the Bishop of Lincoln. The register dates from the year 1564 and contains the entry, Jan 28th, 1625, of Maria, daughter of Richard Powel, and afterwards wife of the poet Milton. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value, £85 with residence, in the gift of the Rector and Fellows of Lincoln College, Oxford, and held since 1871 by the Rev. Walter Neame M.A. of Clare College, Cambridge. The poet Milton in 1645 married from this parish his first wife, Mary, daughter of Richard Powel, and he was subsequently of great service to her relatives when, on account of their connection with the cause of Charles I. they fell into difficulties; Mistress Milton died in 1651. The estate and chapel of Forest Hill formed part of the grant of Robert D'Oiley to the church of St. George in Oxford Castle, afterwards transferred to the Abbey of Oseney; but since the period of the Dissolution the manor house, with a considerable part of the estate, have become the property of the Rector and Fellows of Lincoln College, Oxford, who are lords of the manor and principal landowners. The soil is sandy; subsoil, clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley and beans. The are is 650 acres; rateable value, £1,386; the population in 1881 was 185.

FREELAND is an ecclesiastical parish formed from the civil parish of Eynsham in 1869; it is pleasantly situated about 2¾ miles north-west from Eynsham and about 2½ west from Handborough station on the Oxford, Worcester and Wolverhampton railway and 5 north-east from Witney, in the county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Mary the Virgin is a stone building in the Early English style, erected by subscription in 1869 at a cost of £2,907, and consists of apsidal chancel, nave, south porch and a lofty tower with saddle-back roof containing 1 bell: the chancel, separated from the nave by a metal screen, has a stone groined roof, is lighted by seven stained lancets; the walls are decorated with frescoes which, together with the windows, depict the Passion of Our Saviour; the reredos, of alabaster, is divided into thirteen trefoil-headed compartments or niches filled with sculptured figures, the central compartment exhibiting the Crucifixion; the porch has a stone groined ceiling and parvise over it: the church is seated for 150 persons: the churchyard is approached by a lych-gate, built in 1873. The register dates from the year 1869. The living is a perpetual curacy, net yearly value from ecclesiastical commission £116 with residence, in the gift of trustees and held since 1874 by the Rev. Augustus Henry Eugene de Romestin M.A. of St. John's College, Oxford, and rural dean of Woodstock. The parsonage, built in 1869, is of stone in the same style as the church, which it immediately joins at the west end. The whole cost of the church, parsonage and schools, was over £6,000. Here is a small Wesleyan chapel, built in 1817. Freeland Lodge, situated in well-wooded grounds containing a piece of ornamental water, the house standing on high ground and commanding extensive views of woodland scenery, is the seat of Mrs. Malcolm and at present occupied by Frederick Burn Harvey esq. A little south of the church is St. Mary's house, a large modern mansion of stone in the Gothic style; it commands good views of the surrounding country and is the residence of Mrs. Taunton. The soil is various; subsoil, clay and gravel. The chief crops are the usual cereals. The area is 505 acres; the population in 1881 was 420.

GARSINGTON, in Domesday "Gersehune," is a parish in the hundred of Bullingdon, union of Headington, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Cuddesdon and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 4¾ miles from London, 3 south-west from Wheatley station, on the Great Western railway and 5 south-east from Oxford. The church of St. Mary is an ancient stone building of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, south porch and a plain western tower of Transition Norman date, probably about A.D. 1200 and has several stained windows: the chancel is Late Decorated and has a low side window in both walls and a piscina; the chancel arch is large and lofty, with recurved mouldings and a rood screen of rather Late Perpendicular work: the pulpit dates from the time of Charles II.: the nave is separated from the aisles by arcades of four arches on clustered piers; these are Transition Norman; but the clerestory has circular foliated lights of the Decorated period: the roof is Perpendicular: in the south aisle is a Decorated piscina and doorway, with a wooden porch of the fifteenth century: in the north aisle is an Early English doorway and at its west end is the font, given by Richard Turrill, clerk of the parish, in 1782: the tower is about 42 feet high and has a massive buttress on the north side, in which is a newel staircase leading to the belfry lighted by eight pointed windows, two on each side and surmounted by a plain parapet: there is a brass, with effigies of all, to Thomas Radley gent. 1584; Elizabeth his wife and 10 children, and an ancient stone, bearing a mutilated cross fleury and other sculpture, and inscribed, "× Isabelle de Fortibus gist ici; Deu de sa aime eit merci," believed to commemorate Isabella de Fortibus, Countess of Albemarle, who died in 1293. The church was restored in 1848-9, by Dr. Ingram, President of Trinity College, Oxford, when the roofs and fittings were renewed and the original altar stone, with its five crosses in a perfect state, was recovered and replaced. The register of baptisms and marriages dates from the year 1562; burials, 1563. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £480 with residence and 22¾ acres of glebe, in the gift of Trinity College, Oxford and held since 1871 by the Rev. David Thomas M.A. late fellow of that college. In the centre of the village is a pediment of four steps and lofty shaft of a Norman cross. This village was the head quarters of Sir Thomas Fairfax, on the night of May 1, 1646, previous to the siege of Oxford. Westbrook and Malton's charities amount to £3 15s. yearly for bread. Frederick Morrell esq. is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are Exeter and Queen's Colleges and Frederick Morrell esq. and Messrs. Drake. The soil is clay and loam; subsoil, gravel and white limestone. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The area is 2,230 acres; rateable value, £3,835; and the population in 1871 was 636; and in 1881, 607.

GLYMPTON is a village and parish 4 miles north-west from Woodstock and 5 north-east from the Charlbury station on the Great Western railway, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Woodstock, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, pleasantly situated in a valley on the river Glyme; there is a pretty waterfall on this stream near the rectory grounds. The church of St. Mary is chiefly a modern structure of stone in the Early Decorated style and consists of chancel, nave, south porch and a western tower: the windows are stained: the chancel arch is a fine example of Transition Norman work, with nook shafts and cushion caps; the tower arch is of the same date, but the tower itself is Late Perpendicular; in the floor of the chancel is a brass with effigy and inscription to Thomas Tesdale, co-founder of Pembroke College, Oxford and founder of the ushership at Abingdon school; he was born at Stanford Dingley, Berks, in 1547 and died 10th June, 1610, æt. 63: this brass was placed by his wife Maud, a native of Henley, to whom there is also a fine monument, painted and gilt, with figures kneeling at a prayer-desk; she died in 1616: the church was restored in 1872, when the chancel was rebuilt. The register dates from the year 1667. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £305 with residence and 95 acres of glebe, in the gift of Colonel Henry Barnett D.L., J.P. and held since 1862 by the Rev. Charles Willyams Marsh Bartholomew B.A. of Exeter College, Oxford. Glympton Park is the seat of Colonel Henry Barnett D.L., J.P. lord of the manor and principal landowner; the mansion is a square built house, surrounded by a deer park, through which the river Glyme flows. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, stone brash. The land is chiefly arable; there are about 100 acres of woodland. The area is 1,232 acres; rateable value, £1,406; the population in 1881 was 158.

GODDINGTON is a parish, in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situated on the border of Buckinghamshire, 5½ miles north-east from Bicester and about 5 south-west from Buckingham. This parish consists of a few straggling farmhouses and cottages. The church of the Holy Trinity is a simple stone structure, rebuilt in 1792 and consisting of nave and tower, with an entrance on the south side: the memorials and inscribed stones removed during the rebuilding were replaced. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1672; marriages, 1679. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £403 with rectory house and 201 acres of glebe, in the gift of Corpus Christi college, Oxford and held since 1878 by the Rev. William Henry Jones M.A. Queen's College, Oxford. The Earl of Effingham is lord of the manor and chief landed proprietor. The soil is gravel and clay; subsoil clay, and is principally in pasture. The area is 1,030 acres; rateable value, £1,335; the population in 1881 was 60. The children of this parish attend the school at Stratton Audley. GORING (formerly LITTLE NOTTINGHAM) is a village and parish, with a station on the Great Western railway, in the hundred of Langtree, union of Bradfield, county court district of Wallingford, rural deanery of Henley and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 10 miles north-west from Reading, 12 west from Henley, 6 south from Wallingford, 19 from Oxford and 44½ by railway from London. The village is picturesquely situated in one of the most beautiful parts of the Thames valley, and occupies a site on the left bank of the river, between it and the railway; the stream, flowing through verdant meads, here takes a wide turn to the west and is over-shadowed on that side by a sharply rising bluff, densely wooded; on the opposite bank lies Streatley, reached by a long wooden bridge and shut in by bold and lofty hills of chalk, with short grass and clumps of juniper. In the fields and gardens about here strong foundations of ancient structures, Roman coins, vases, pavements and barrows have been discovered and one of the Roman roads, called the Icknield, or Ickleton way, which here crossed the Thames, is still used. The church of St. Thomas à Becket, placed almost on the bank of the river, is a small and curious Norman building and consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, north aisle and an embattled tower, at the west end of the aisle, containing 5 bells: this church belonged to a house of Austin Canons, founded before the time of Henry II. and traces of its buildings may be seen on the west and south sides of the church, the blank wall below the clerestory on the south side indicating the position of the ancient cloisters; many of the original windows remain: the arcade of the north aisle consists of three arches of Transition Norman date, on massive circular piers; this aisle is very narrow and two stories in height with a Norman clerestory; the tower is a very singular example of Norman work, with groined vaulting and a round stained turret: on the right of the communion table are brasses with male and female effigies and others of three sons and five daughters; these are undated, but appear to be of the sixteenth century; there is also a brass figure of a lady, beneath a canopy, with a mutilated marginal inscription to Elizabeth ..., 1401; and an inscribed brass, in Norman-French, to Henry de Aldrynton, 1375, between the nave and north aisle. The register dates from the year 1670, but the earlier portion consists of loose imperfect sheets only. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £150 with residence, in the gift of Charles Laurence Weare Gardiner esq. and held since 1851 by the Rev. William Henry Stokes M.A. of Wadham College, Oxford. There is a chapel for the Lady Huntingdon sect, built in 1792. Here is a Temperance Hall and British Workmen's Club, erected in 1878. Here are almhouses for four old men, viz. two of this parish, one of Checkendon and one of Whitchurch, with a weekly provision of 5s. 6d. each, founded and endowed in 1714 by Richard Lybbe esq. of Hardwick. The poor's allotment of 20 acres produces £20 yearly; Cresswell's (Whitchurch) charity provides coats for two aged men of this parish. Philip Lybbe Powys-Lybbe esq. J.P. who is lord of the manor and Charles Laurence Weare Gardiner esq. and General Fife R.E. are chief landowners The soil is chalk and gravel; subsoil, clayey. The crops are wheat, barley, oats and roots. The area is 4,377 acres; rateable value, £11,535; the population in 1881 was 976.

GATEHAMPTON, on the banks of the Thames, about 1 mile from the Great Western railway station at Goring and in the parish of Goring, is supposed to have been a place of some consequence about the twelfth century, as the foundations of buildings have been frequently discovered.

Parish Clerk, Barnard Shaw.

GORING HEATH, in the parish of Goring, is 6 miles north-west from Reading and 4 from the Goring station; this once barren heath is now a cultivated tract. Here are almshouses for twelve poor men of the parishes of Goring, South Stoke, Checkendon, Cassington and Ipstone (Bucks), founded and endowed with houses and land in 1724 by Henry Allnutt esq. of the Middle Temple; each almsman has a house, garden, supply of wood, clothing and 7s. 6d. a week and medical assistance; there is a resident nurse; attached to this establishment is a chapel and consisting of chancel and nave: in the chancel are marble monuments to Henry Allnutt, the founder of the charity and Richard Clement, his executor: the Rev. Nicholas Belfield Dennys M.A. of Queens' College, Cambridge, is chaplain and receives about £108 a year: the income, amounting to £636 yearly, is subject to a payment of £70 yearly to clerk and trustees and miscellaneous expenses; the charity also provides £134 yearly for apprenticing boys of the parishes above named, including £14 for their outfit; the almshouse charity has been increased by a bequest of £21 yearly from the Rev. John Baker, who also added £8 a year to the chaplain's stipend. The chief landowners are P. L. Powys-Lybbe esq. who is lord of the manor, Mr. Morrison, C. L. W. Gardiner esq. and John Foster esq. The soil is chalk, clay and gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats.

COLLINS' END consists of a few scattered cottages. Charles I. when staying as a prisoner at Caversham Park, is stated to have played at bowls here, on a green attached to the old public-house; a portrait of the then hostess has been preserved as a memorial of the occurrence.

GREYS, see ROTHERFIELD GREYS.

HAILEY-CUM-CRAWLEY is a scattered township and ecclesiastical parish formed from the civil parish of Witney in 1854. Hailey proper is a small village pleasantly situated on high ground on the road from Witney to Charlbury, 1½ miles north from Witney, in Witney union and county court district, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The parish comprises the out-lying hamlets of DELLY END, POFFLEY END, part of NEWYATT and WHITE OAK GREEN; WEST END and WOOD GREEN, forming part of Witney town, belong to this parish for civil purposes but to Witney for ecclesiastical matters. The old church of St. John the Baptist, built in 1761, except a small portion of the west end, mantled with ivy and left to mark the site, was pulled down in 1868 and the materials used in the erection of a new edifice, this is of stone in the Early French Gothic style and consists of chancel, nave, north aisle, south porch, vestry and a circular bell turret, at the west end of the aisle, containing 1 bell: the church was built in 1868-9 on a site given by the vicar, at a cost of £2,000, raised by subscription and consecrated in April of the latter year; it will seat 300 persons. The register of Hailey, as a separate parish, dates only from the year 1854; earlier entries are in the registers of Witney, which begin in 1578. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £300 with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1838 by the Rev. George Crabb Rolfe M.A. of St. John's College, Cambridge; the rector of Witney holds the rectorial tithes and the vicar of Hailey takes the tithes of Crawley. Here is a Wesleyan chapel and a Primitive Methodist chapel at Newyatt. A charity, left in 1640 by Joan Smith, provides sums of about £17 each yearly for education and apprenticing; 10s. for a sermon; the charities for distribution amount to about £6 yearly.

CRAWLEY is a very secluded and compactly-built place, situated in a hollow about 1 mile west-south-west from Hailey; it is watered by the river Windrush, over which there is a bridge with three elliptical arches. The church of St. Peter, placed on an eminence, is a very unpretending edifice, built in 1837 by the rector of Witney, at a cost of about £250; it was consecrated in 1847 and will seat 100 persons. One mile south of Crawley was a mound, now cleared away, from which at different times many human remains and Roman coins had been taken; in Woodley's copse, eastward, other remains of a similar character have been traced.

From Hailey village, Delly End is a quarter of a mile north, Poffley End half a mile east, White Oak Green one mile north and Newyatt about 1½ miles east. The principal landowners are Duke of Marlborough (lord of the manor), William Clinch esq. University College, Oxon, Miss Pickering, G. Adams of Manor House, and C. Townsend esqrs. Mrs. Thomas Winning, Mrs. John Porter and Mr. Richard Porter. The soil is clayey on the hills and chisley on the lowlands; subsoil, clay. The crops are cereals—chiefly wheat. The area is—Hailey, 2,827 acres; Crawley, 1,116 acres; rateable value—Hailey, £5,931; Crawley, £1,502; the population in 1881 was—Hailey, 1,264; Crawley, 160

HAMPTON GAY is a parish and village within the parliamentary borough of Woodstock, on the river Cherwell, in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Woodstock, rural deanery of Islip and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 6½ miles north from Oxford, 3 east from Woodstock and 2 north from Woodstock Road station. The appellation "Gay" is a perversion through the pronunciation, from "Gail," the manor having been held in 1138 by Sir Robert Gail knight, who, in 1140, gave the church by charter to the Abbey of Oseney, and subsequently transferred to it the manor also. The church of St. Giles is small, consisting of nave, south porch and a low western embattled tower; it was built in the last century and refitted in 1859 in the Early English style; the exterior was at the same time made to correspond with the interior by the insertion of new windows, mullions and doors: the church is interesting as showing what may be done with the unsightly architecture of the eighteenth century; on the north wall is a fine alabaster monument with kneeling figures to the Barry and Fenner families, 1665. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1622; marriages, 1657; burials, 1621. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £20, devised by the Rev. T. Hindes in 1768, in the gift of Wadham College, Oxford and held since 1871, by the Rev. Henry William Yule B.D., B.C.L. of that college, who is also rector of and resides at Shipton-on-Cherwell, and is domestic chaplain to the Duke of Marlborough. The Manor House is a fine Elizabethan building with two gables and a projecting porch; the interior retains some fine chimney pieces, though dilapidated; it now forms two houses. The Warden and Fellows of Wadham College, Oxford, who are lords of the manor, and Viscount Valentia are the principal landowners. The soil is clay and sand; subsoil, clay and sand. The land is half arable and half pasture. The area is 725 acres; rateable value, £1,173; the population in 1881 was 40.

HAMPTON POYLE is a parish and village, 6 miles north from Oxford, 4½ east from Woodstock and 2½ east from Woodstock Road station, situated on the Cherwell, in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Woodstock, rural deanery of Islip and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Mary is an ancient structure of mixed styles and consists of chancel, nave, aisles and a bell turret at the west end containing 2 bells; the east window, of three lights, is a remarkably fine example of the transition from Early English to Decorated and has good geometrical tracery; the chancel arch is of the latter period; the nave is separated from the north aisle by an arcade of two arches, on octagonal pillars, with capitals bearing demi-figures; on the south side are two Decorated arches springing from a flat pier; in the north aisle is a fine Perpendicular recess with an open crocketed canopy and here is a small piscina, formed by a hand supporting a basin; in the south aisle are two monumental effigies of a knight in plate armour, crosslegged, and his lady, and a brass to John Poyle esq. 1424, and Elizabeth his wife; the church was restored in 1870. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1540; marriages, 1545; burials, 1544. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value from tithe rent charge £140 with glebe house and 25 acres of glebe, in the gift of Queen's College, Oxford, and held since 1879 by the Rev. Francis Keyes Yates Aglionby M.A. of that college. Viscount Valentia, who is lord of the manor and Captain George Knapp are the principal landowners. The soil is mixed; the land arable and pasture, in parts gravel and in other portions clay. The area is 830 acres; rateable value, £1,274; the population in 1881 was 105.

HANDBOROUGH (or HANBOROUGH), is a village and parish within the parliamentary borough of Woodstock, with a station on the Oxford and Worcester line of the Great Western railway, 67 miles from London, 5½ north-east from Witney, 5 south-west from Woodstock and 8½ north-west from Oxford, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, bounded on the north and east by the river Evenlode; the parish is divided into Church Handborough and Long Handborough. The church of SS. Peter and Paul, placed on an elevated site, is a fine structure, principally of the Perpendicular period and consists of chancel with north chapel, nave, clerestoried aisles, north and south porches and a western tower with lofty spire 132 feet high, containing a clock and 5 bells; the chancel, originally Early English, has a Perpendicular east window of debased character, a circular headed aumbry, and a sepulchral recess on the south side; the chancel arch is Early English, and retains its rood screen, with a cresting of the Tudor flower; across the aisles the rood-loft, dating from about 1460, is perfect; the projecting canopy is panelled with bosses and has an elaborately carved cornice, with a wavy stem of vine leaves and grapes; the whole retains traces of colour and gilding; the nave is Perpendicular and is separated from the aisles by arcades of three arches on each side, springing from octagonal piers; the clerestory has three square-headed windows on each side; the font is octagonal, with panelled sides and a pedestal of the same shape and is Perpendicular; the pulpit is of the same period, with elaborate oak tracery: many open oak benches remain; the outer walls are Norman and retain their original doorways and some of the windows; the tower is of three stages, with a quatre-foiled parapet, from within which rises the spire, octagonal and ribbed, with two tiers of windows; in the north-west corner of the churchyard are the remains of a mansoleum of the Boucher family, dating from the beginning of the last century; there is also a very good example of a fifteenth century cruciform headstone, of a pattern now rare. The church contains a brass with recumbent shrouded effigy, four Latin verses and an English verse translation, to Alexander Belasyre, first president of St. John's College, ob. 13th July, 1567; and other brasses are recorded to the family of Culpepper, 1580-1616; Joan, wife of Maurice Mericke gent, 1617; Christopher Ford and Jane his wife, and Thomas Wheeler, her first husband; as well as monuments in the chancel to Margaret, wife of Humphrey Clarke esq. of Woodchurch, Kent, 1542 and to Jane, widow of Walter Culpepper esq. 1636; some windows on the south side contained inscriptions with figures to Richard Snareston, who repaired one of these in 1453; William Bayley, Thomas Rock and John Sprot. The register of baptisms and marriages dates from the year 1560; burials, 1561. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £420 with residence, in the gift of St. John's College, Oxford and held since 1854 by the Rev. Richard William Higgs D.C.L. of that college. The poor's land of 10 acres, awarded in 1773, produces £5 yearly, which, together with Vallence's charity of £17 yearly is distributed in money; there are other charities amounting altogether to £7 a year, which is expended in bread. Handborough is noted for the Selenite or moonstone, which has been found here in great abundance. The Duke of Marlborough is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil is gravel and clay; subsoil, the same. The chief crops are the usual cereals. The population in 1881 was 975; the area (including Long Handborough) is 2,390 acres; rateable value, £4,371.

LONG HANDBOROUGH is a hamlet in this parish, one mile north-west; here is a Wesleyan chapel.

HANWELL is a village and parish on the borders of Warwickshire, 3 miles north-by-west from Banbury, 25 north-west from Oxford, in the hundred of Bloxham, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Peter is a fine example of the Decorated period, with some portions of Early English and consists of chancel, nave, aisles, porch on the south side and a low western embattled tower containing 5 bells; the chancel has sedilia and piscina of good Decorated work and the capitals of the columns in the nave arcades are ornamented with figures elegantly sculptured; these arcades each consist of three Decorated arches, but the clerestory and roof are of the fifteenth century; at the east end of the north aisle are the remains of an ancient reredos with figures under canopies; the chancel contains a monument with recumbent effigies and inscription in Latin verse to Sir Anthony Cope, knight and baronet, who died in 1614, which with many other portions of the church suffered greatly at the hands of the Puritan fanatics under Cromwell, who is said to have stabled a troop of horse in this church; the monument was repaired about 1813, by the Duchess of Dorset; the reredos, consisting of five small Decorated niches, with figures, is unusually perfect and has been carefully restored by the present rector; in the south aisle are remains of a piscina with shelf, and two stone coffin lids, one bearing a cross flory and the other a female figure, and here is a large modern altar tomb; the font is Norman. The register dates from the year 1568. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £320 with residence (rebuilt in 1862) and 27 acres of glebe, in the gift of Earl De La Warr and held since 1861 by the Rev. Vincent Pearse M.A. late Lord Crewe's Exhibitioner, of Lincoln College, Oxford. There are no charities except the interest on £13, a charge upon Earl De la Warr's estate, which is distributed at Christmas. Here are the remains of a castle (now used as a farmhouse) with a good brick tower of Perpendicular work, formerly the residence of Sir Anthony Cope, knight and baronet. Earl De la Warr is lord of the manor and sole landowner. The soil is principally light loam. The crops are general. The area is 1,240 acres; rateable value, £2,131; the population in 1881 was 253.

HARDWICK, see DUCKLINGTON.

HARDWICKE is a small parish in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 5 miles north-west from Bicester, about 10 south-east from Banbury and 5 south from Brackley. The church of St. Mary is a small ancient structure, chiefly of the Decorated period, and consists of chancel, nave and aisle, recently restored by the Earl of Effingham; the chancel windows have good flowing tracery, with some remains of fine painted glass. The west window was opened, and that and the east window filled with stained glass, and the north door was opened: on the north side is a Norman doorway in good preservation. The register of baptisms and marriages dates from the year 1758; burials, 1760. The living is a rectory, yearly value £92, in the gift of the Earl of Effingham, and held since 1867 by the Rev. Charles Sawkins Harrison M.A. of University College, Durham, who is also rector of Cottisford and Tusmore, and resides at the rectory, Cottisford. The Earl of Effingham is lord of the manor and sole proprietor of the land. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, stone. The chief crops are wheat, beans and barley. The population in 1881 was 60; the area (including Tusmore) is 910 acres; rateable value, £369.

Parish Clerk, Philip Hatwell.

HARPSDEN is a village and parish 2 miles south from Henley-on-Thames, on the high road from Henley to Reading, from which place it is 7 miles north-east, in Binfield hundred, Henley union and county court district, rural deanery, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford; it is bounded on the east by the Thames. The church of St. Margaret is an ancient structure chiefly of the Decorated period, consisting of chancel, nave, north aisle, south porch and low square tower: the east window of two lights is Decorated, the west window Perpendicular, and the chancel arch modern: the south porch has open timber work of the Decorated period, with barge boards, and arcaded sides; it contains brasses to a widow lady, c. 1460, small, with a mutilated inscription; figures of a man in armour, and his wife, c. 1480; to Walter Elmes, rector, 1511; and to Sara, wife of John Webb, rector, and daughter of Roger and Anne Allanson, of London, 1620: in a recess on the right of the chancel is a recumbent figure of a knight in a long loose tunic, with legs crossed and feet resting on a dog, while the right hand rests upon the sword hilt; the effigy is probably of the fourteenth century; there are some good floor tiles of unusual design: the church was completely restored in 1854; a new reredos was erected and the chancel decorated in 1879 by the rector. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1560; marriages, 1563; burials, 1558. The living is a rectory, commuted at £592, gross yearly value, £700, with about 90 acres of glebe and residence, in the gift of All Souls College, Oxford, and held since 1869, by the Rev. Frederick Bagot D.C.L. of that college, prebendary of Wells. A charity, left by some unknown donor, provides 7s. 6d. a year for bread. Harpsden Court, the residence of the Rev. Fitzwilliam Wentworth Atkyns-Bowyer M.A. is an ancient mansion adjacent to the church and surrounded by hilly beech woods; the mansion formerly possessed two courts, but was much altered in the reign of James I.; in a wood south-west of the house is a circumvallation, in which it is said Roman coins have been found; Bolney Court, on the banks of the Thames, is the residence of John Fowden Hodges esq. D.L., J.P. who is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil is mixed, principally gravel; subsoil, chalk and gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and peas. The area is 1,460 acres; rateable value, £3,083; the population in 1881 was 226.

Parish Clerk, Geo. Tamlin.

GREAT HASELEY (or HAZELEY), with the township of LITTLE HASELEY, liberty of RYCOTE and hamlets of LATCHFORD and LOBB, is a parish in the hundred of Ewelme, union and county court district of Thame, rural deanery of Cuddesdon and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. GREAT HASELEY is 2 miles south from Tiddington station and 5½ miles south-west from Thame. The church of St. Peter is an ancient and spacious edifice in various styles of architecture, the tower and western part retaining portions of the Norman, part of the south side the Early English style, while the chancel, which is the most modern portion, is Decorated; the building consists of a spacious chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles and a lofty embattled tower, chiefly of Perpendicular date, at the west end containing 6 bells, dating from 1641 to 1710: the east window of five lights, a fine example of geometrical tracery, was carefully restored in 1843; on the south side are three sedilia with piscina, of Early Decorated character; adjoining these is a large arch, with trefoiled open feathering, and within it a stone sarcophagus, on the lid of which are traces of a large cross, and supposed to be the tomb of the founder of the church; within the chancel close to the north side of the communion table is a panelled altar tomb, erected to Sir William Barrendyne, thrice high sheriff of Berks and Oxon, in the reign of Henry VIII.; on this tomb has been placed the figure of a knight which formerly stood in the tower, it consists of a full-length effigy, encased in chain mail, over which is a long surcoat; the legs are crossed and rest on a lion, and the right hand holds a drawn sword; the figure belongs to the early part of the thirteenth century, and has been assigned, with some probability, to William de Magnaville, earl of Essex and Albemarle, who held the manor of Rycote from 1166; at the east end of the north aisle is a small chantry, with a blocked doorway once admitting to it, piscina and aumbry; in the north wall of the chantry is a sepulchral recess, and at the south-east angle, a hagioscope; the south aisle has also remains of a small chapel or oratory at the east end, with a Decorated piscina, portions of a reredos, and a canopied niche on the south side; along the side of the aisle are three recessed arches in the main wall of the early fourteenth century; in this chantry is the effigy of another knight, mutilated, of the reign of Henry III.; on the north side of the chancel and entered by a door in the interior, is a monumental chapel of the Blackalls, once lords of the manor, and now the property of Walter Long esq.; it contains a memorial to George Blackall esq. 1709: the nave has four arches on either side on round piers with flat foliaged capitals of late Norman or Transition character; the rood loft door and staircase remain on the south side: there are brasses in the chancel to Marie, wife of Anthony Huddleston esq. and daughter of Sir William Barrentyne kt. 1581; to Thomas Buttler, a former rector, in academical dress, with shields of arms, 1444; and to Nicholas Englefield esq. controller of the household to Richard II. 1415; and in the aisles to William Leynthall, lord of Lachford, 1497; and Julian, wife of Sir Richard Fowler of Rycote kt. 1527; there are other memorials to the family of Woolfe, 1739-68; Greening and Smith, 1652; and the Rev. John Whistler M.A. 1636; the windows, both of this church and of Rycote chapel, were formerly filled with heraldic glass. The register dates from the year 1538. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £900 with modern residence from designs by the late Sir G. G. Scott R.A. and 97 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Dean and Canons of Windsor and held since 1873 by the Rev. Henry John Ellison M.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge, hon. canon of Christ Church and chaplain in ordinary to the Queen. Here is a Congregational chapel built in 1778. Luke Tayler's charity provides, in addition to the school endowment, a yearly sum of £110 for apprenticing, about £98 for distribution in kind, and £86 in money. There are other charities yielding £3 a year for clothing. The celebrated antiquary, John Leland, was rector of this parish from 1542 to 1552; and Christopher Wren D.D. father of the famous architect of that name, held the living from 1638 till 1645. On pulling down the old parsonage inside walls, which were six feet thick, lofty arched windows appeared, and behind a fireplace formed in one of them was a number of encaustic tiles with various patterns, about the date of Henry III. M. P. W. Boulton esq. of Great Tew, holds the manor by lease from the Dean and Canons of Windsor and he is the principal landowner. The soil is clay; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley and beans. The area is 3,219 acres; rateable value, £5,602; the population in 1871 of the whole parish was 745 and is divided as follows: —Great Haseley 534, Little Haseley township 145; Rycote liberty 34 and Latchford and Lobb hamlets 32.

Parish Clerk, John Shrimpton.

LITTLE HASELEY is a township ¾ mile south. Haseley Court, the seat of James Patrick Muirhead esq. is a building in the Grecian style, pleasantly situated in 28 acres of ground. The former domestic chapel is now fitted as a library, but the east window, in the style of the Early Fourteenth Century, remained perfect; the side windows are square-headed and later. The principal landowner is M. P. Watts Bolton esq.

RYCOTE LIBERTY is 1¼ miles south-east from Teddington station. Rycote Park was formerly the seat of the Berties, Earls of Abingdon, and previously belonged to the Quartermaynes; the mansion dismantled and used in the building of Wytham manor house, was partly destroyed by fire in 1747; the only remaining portion is that of a tower in which Queen Elizabeth was lodged when taken prisoner at Woodford, and the stables, which have been converted into a farm house. Charles I. also temporarily resided here during the civil war, 1643-4. The ancient chapel of St. Michael and All Angels, founded in 1449 by Richard Quartremain and Sybilla (Englefield), his wife, is a good Perpendicular building, consisting of chancel and nave under one roof, with a western battlemented tower, and has an octagonal font; the interior is seated with open benches, and has some carved pews of the Renaissance period and a pulpit in the same style; against the south wall is a large marble monument to James Bertie, earl of Abingdon, and Lord Great Chamberlain, ob. 1699; and the building has been used as the burying-place of the Norrey and Bertie families. The Earl of Abingdon is lord of the manor and sole landowner.

LATCHFORD 1½ miles east-by-south and LOBB 2 miles north-east are hamlets.

HEADINGTON is a parish and head of a union in the hundred of Bullingdon, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Islip and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 1½ miles east-north-east from Oxford; a small portion is within the municipal and parliamentary limits of Oxford city. The old Roman road passes toward Headington Quarry pits; the road from Oxford to Headington is broad and very steep; the lofty terrace walk on the north side was constructed about the middle of last century, the cost being defrayed by subscription. The church of St. Andrew is an ancient structure of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, nave, aisles, south porch and an embattled tower at the west end of the south aisle, with a square turret at the south-west angle, and containing clock and 6 bells: the chancel is the oldest portion of the church; on the outside of its north wall are the remains of a Norman doorway, and near it a semicircular arch of rude stones; two Perpendicular windows in the south wall retain fragments of stained glass of earlier date; there is a sedile, formed by the sill of a window, and a blocked piscina; the chancel arch is recessed towards the west, and ornamented with double zig-zag and bold round mouldings, rising from a shaft on each side, the same work being carried down the joints: the nave and south aisle are Early English, divided by three arches on massive round pillars, with moulded caps and bases; in the south wall is a piscina, and at the north-east angle are the remains of rood loft stairs: in the south door the original iron work is retained: the north aisle is modern, and separated from the nave by three arches cut through the wall; the lower has Early English arches on the north and east opening into the church, the latter being closed by a screen, dated 1635; the outer walls of the tower are Perpendicular, and one side bears the date 1679: in the churchyard, a little to the south-east of the porch, is a fine Perpendicular cross, raised on three steps, and consisting of an octagonal quatrefoiled base, from which rises a ribbed shaft of similar form, supporting a heavy square head and terminating in a cross. The register dates from the year 1683. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £185 with residence, endowed with £400 royal bounty, in the gift of Mrs. Rawlinson and held since 1879 by the Rev. Edmund Francis Gnise Tyndale M.A. of Magdalen College, Oxford. The Baptists have a chapel here, built in 1805. Headington was once famous for its bull-baiting, which attracted many spectators from a distance as well as from Oxford. Wharton's charity of £27 yearly is for fuel, the Pent Moor and Shotover Hill allotments and Hinde's charity produce altogether £17 a year which is distributed in money. The Warneford Lunatic Asylum is a stone building containing male and female wards with space for 80 inmates, and is supported partly by endowment and otherwise by subscriptions and fees. The Wingfield Convalescent Home is a building of red brick, opened in 1872 in connection with the Radcliffe Infirmary in Oxford, since which time between 1,300 and 1,400 patients have been treated; it is partially endowed, but is mainly supported by voluntary contributions. The principal landowners are Magdalen College, Oxford, W. C. Faulkner esq. the trustees of the late William Peppercorn, who are lords of the manor, and Mrs. Stone. In the reign of Ethelred, Headington was the seat of a royal palace, said to have stood in a field called "Court close," and in part on the route of the present road to Marston. The soil is sandy; subsoil, clay and stone of the Coralline oolite, which has been much used in Oxford. The chief crops are wheat and barley. The area is 1,780 acres; rateable value, £9,322; the population in 1871 was 2,384 and in 1881 was 2,777.

BARTON is a portion of this parish, as also is a place known as BARTLEMAS, formerly extra-parochial.

HENLEY-UPON-THAMES.

HENLEY-UPON-THAMES is a corporate, market and union town, head of a county court district and polling place for the county, in the hundred of Binfield, rural deanery of Henley, diocese and archdeaconry of Oxford, in the southern part of the county, 35 miles from London by the road through Maidenhead, and 35½ to Paddington by the Great Western railway, which has a station here on a branch line diverging from the main line at Twyford, 10 north-east from Reading, 11¼ north-west from Maidenhead and 23 south-east from the city of Oxford. This is one of the prettiest summer retreats in the county, and is surrounded by handsome villas and plantations; it is pleasantly situated on the high road from London to Oxford, on a slight ascent from the banks of the river Thames, which here separates the counties of Oxford and Berks, and is almost entirely surrounded by well-wooded heights: since the opening of the railway the town has become a very favourite and fashionable place of resort: below the bridge and on both sides of the railway are a number of attractive houses, with brilliant flower beds and trim lawns stretching down to the river's edge, and in the upper outskirts, and particularly towards the Fair Hill, the increasing number of handsome dwellings sufficiently testifies to its continued popularity. A stone bridge of five arches, uniting the town of Henley with the parish of Remenham, Berkshire, was erected in 1786, at an expense of £10,000; the keystones of the centre arch, representing by ideal heads the rivers Thame and Isis, were sculptured by the Hon. Mrs. Damer. The town, incorporated 9 George II. consists principally of four wide streets and is lighted with gas; the houses are for the most part spacious and well built. The corporation consists of a mayor, six aldermen, two bridgemen, eight burgesses (including the two bridgemen), a high steward and a recorder.

The sanitary arrangements of the town are under a local board of twelve members.

The church of St. Mary, standing near the bridge, is a large and elegant edifice of stone and flint, in the Decorated and Perpendicular styles, and consists of chancel with north aisle, nave, aisles and a lofty embattled tower with turrets at the angles and containing 8 bells; at the east end of the north aisle is a Perpendicular window with curious painted glass, and on the south side some richly Decorated recesses: the space under the tower has been formed into a baptistery and here is placed the monument of Lady Elizabeth Periam, a benefactress to Balliol College, Oxford, the wife first of Robert Doyley, next of Henry Neville and lastly of Sir William Periam, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, she was sister of Lord Chancellor Bacon and died in 1621; the monument bears her effigy in a semi-recumbent posture, the right hand holding a book; here also is a monument to William Hayward, of Shrewsbury, architect, after whose design the bridge over the Thames here was erected, and who died in 1782 before it was begun; in the Elmes chapel, now used as an organ chamber, is a mural monument to members of that family from 1626 to 1720, and on the south wall a tablet to the celebrated French General, Dumouriez, who died near Henley in 1823, and is buried in the aisle: in the churchyard is interred Richard Jennings, master builder of St. Paul's cathedral, who resided for some time at Badgemore: in the ancient lady chapel was formerly a window representing the murder of Thomas à Becket, removed about 1540, as superstitious, at the instance of Miles Coverdale: the brasses formerly in the church are now lost. At St.Mary's Rectory is a library of valuable books, bequeathed to the town byDr.HenryAldrich, who was rector of Henley and died in 1737: in the summer of 1853 a subscription was set on foot for the restoration of the church by the then rector, Dr. Morrell, now Bishop of Edinburgh, and subsequently effected at a cost exceeding £7,000, under the direction of B. Ferrey esq. of London; the church was reopened on Friday, the 1st December, 1854, since which a new west window and screen of oak have been added. The parish register dates from the year 1558. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £240 with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1867 by the Rev. Greville Phillimore M.A. of Christ Church, Oxford, and surrogate.

Holy Trinity is an ecclesiastical parish formed in 1849 out of portions of the parishes of Rotherfield Greys, Rotherfield Peppard and Henley-upon-Thames; the church, erected in 1848, on the south side of the town, in the parish of Rotherfield Greys, is a building of flint and stone in the Early English style and consists of chancel, nave, aisles and a bell-turret containing 1 bell; it was built by subscription from designs by B. Ferrey esq. architect. The register dates from the year 1848. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £125 with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford for the next turn, but afterwards in that of Trinity College, Oxford, and held since 1848 by the Rev. William Philip Pinckney M.A. of Trinity College Cambridge.

The Congregational chapel, Reading-road, is a plain substantial building, erected in 1719, and enlarged in 1829 and will seat 600 persons: the first minister was Rev. John Gyles, ejected from the vicarage of Lindridge, Herefordshire, in 1662, by the Act of Uniformity; he died 26th April, 1683, and a tablet with quaint inscription to his memory may be seen in the chapel. In 1748 the Rev. Humphrey Gainsborough, an ingenious man, who superintended various engineering enterprises at and near the town, and was brother of Gainsborough the artist, became minister; there is a memorial to him on the front of the chapel. There is a manse for the minister hard by the chapel, and at the far end of the garden there are good school-rooms, erected by subscription in 1856. Connected with this chapel is the Henley Congregational Benefit Society, established in 1838.

The Wesleyan Chapel in Duke street was opened in 1874, and then contained 160 sittings: it was enlarged in 1875, and re-opened on November 2nd of that year. A school room has also been built.

There are also two Baptist chapels and a Meeting House at Northfield End for the Society of Friends.

The Cemetery, four acres in extent, is situated at the end of the Fair Mile, and was opened in 1868. There is a mortuary chapel in which services are held every Sunday at three o'clock.

The Grammar school was founded by King James I. in 1604 for classical and mathematical studies, and now prepares for the universities, learned professions and the public service. The Blue Coat (now called the English school) was founded by Lady Elizabeth Periam in the reign of James I. for the free education of 20 boys of the town, and the school was from the time of George III. until 1879 united with the Grammar school under one master; since that date it has been administered under the provisions of a new scheme as a distinct institution, although controlled by the same governing body; there are still 20 free boys, and about 40 others paying a fee of £3 a year.

The Town Hall, standing on an ascent to the west of the Market place, was erected in 1790, by Mr. William Bradshaw, a member of the corporation: the style of architecture is Roman-Doric, the lower portion forms a piazza, used as a market, and the upper story contains a finely proportioned and capacious hall, with council chamber and magistrates' rooms: in the hall are full-length portraits of George I. by Sir Godfrey Kneller, and Thomas Parker, Earl of Macclesfield, and first High Steward of the town, presented in 1750 by Lady Kneller.

Petty Sessions for the Henley division of the county are held here every fortnight at the Town Hall, and petty sessions by the Borough Magistrates are held every Monday also at the Town Hall. The Police station is in West street, near the Town Hall: the force consists of a superintendent, 1 sergeant and 11 constables.

The Henley Water Works, commenced in November 1880, were formally opened in June, 1882, by the Right Hon. W. H. Smith M.P.; they belong to a private company, with a capital of £10,000; the water is obtained from a well sunk in the chalk to a depth of 240 feet, and is raised from the Pumping Station at the bottom of Dean Field to a large reservoir capable of holding a three days' supply, and situated at the top of Badgemore Hill; this company was the first in England to adopt the Atkins' Patent for softening and purifying the water, a process which has proved in every way a great success.

The Theatre, converted into a Dissenting chapel some years since, and afterwards used as a temporary church while the parish church was under repair, is now used as a lecture room connected with the church, and is called St. Mary's Hall.

In Hart street is a news-room, established in 1843, and there is a good billiard room at the back of the Town Hall.

The Volunteer Fire Brigade comprises a captain-lieutenant, two firemen, an engineer, and 20 pioneers, with three manual engines and one fire escape.

The market is held on Thursday; and fairs on March 7th, Holy Thursday, the Thursday after Trinity Sunday, and the Thursday after September 21st (a statute hiring fair).

The chief hotels are the "Red Lion," immediately north of the bridge, a favourite point of view on the Regatta day; the "Angel," at the foot of the bridge on the south side; "Catherine Wheel," Hart street, and "Royal," facing the river near the railway station.

A considerable trade is carried on in corn, flour, malt and beech wood. There are three extensive breweries.

Archbishop Laud's charity of £10 yearly is for apprenticing poor boys and for marriage portions for poor maids, the latter being entitled to the benefit every third year; the Bridge rents produce about £38 yearly, of which about £12 is applied to education, £13 to church purposes, and the remainder to the relief of the poor; the remaining charities yield about £50 a year for church purposes: £130 for public uses, chiefly relating to the repair of the bridge, £48 for pensions to blind persons and others, £173 for distribution in kind and money, and £336 for the general uses of the poor; the last named being subject to a fee-farm rent of £13 6s. 8d. on account of Henry Smith's charity, to Caius College, Cambridge.

There are twenty-six almshouses, situate on the east and west sides of St. Mary's churchyard: ten endowed by Mrs. Humphrey Newberry in 1664 with an income of £94 per annum; four by Mrs. Ann Messenger in 1666, rebuilt in the Gothic style by the Corporation in 1846, with a yearly endowment of £10; and twelve endowed by John Longland Bishop of Lincoln (a native of this town and confessor to King Henry VIII.) in 1547; they were rebuilt in 1830 and have an annual income of £196.

Pyrites and a black flint, used in making glass, are found here.

On the wide and beautiful reach of water immediately adjoining the town an annual regatta, established in 1839 for amateur oarsmen, is usually held on or about the 21st and 22nd June; this meeting takes the first place among general amateur aquatic contests in England, both in respect of the character and skill of competitors and of the fashionable assemblage of spectators which it invariably attracts: the prizes principally contended for are challenge prizes—viz., held by the winners from year to year, and include the Grand Challenge Cup and the Thomas Challenge Cup for eight oars; the Stewards' Challenge Cup and the Wyfold Challenge Cup for fours; the Silver Goblets for pairs, and the Diamond Challenge Sculls for scullers; all these being open races. The Ladies' Challenge Plate and the Visitors Challenge Cup for fours are limited to the Colleges and Public schools; the regatta is liberally supported by the neighbouring nobility and gentry, many of whom fill the office of steward, and among the competitors will be found the elite of the aquatic world in Oxford, Cambridge, London and Dublin. The Henley Rowing Club was established in 1830, and has its head quarters near the bridge.

Henley is a favourite resort for anglers, but the river here now furnishes little else besides roach and chub: a society has been formed for preserving the fish and cultivating exhausted species. The Chiltern Hundred Hills commence from this point and extend to Tring, Herts. The prospects from Henley are in the highest degree picturesque and beautiful, the country around being pleasingly diversified by lofty wooded hills sloping to the Thames. Henley Hill, through the chalky face of which the road is cut, is to the east; at its base are houses intermixed with wooded scenery. On a height is a circle of stones, denominated a Druids' Temple, brought from the Island of Jersey. The river Thames, seen in many parts to great advantage, considerably heightens the beauty of the prospects. John Longland, Bishop of Lincoln, 1521-47, was a native of Henley, and William Lenthall, Speaker of the Long Parliament, was born here in 1591. In 1644, during the Civil War, a considerable Parliamentary force was quartered here under the Earl of Essex, and the town was again garrisoned by the Parliament in 1646.

The FAIR MILE is a fine avenue of trees north of the town, about a mile in length leading to Assenden.

The old manor house of Phyllis Court stood on the bank of the Thames, on the north of the town: about 1788 the principal part was pulled down, and the remainder has been recently removed to make room for a handsome modern residence erected by Hugh Mair esq.

Badgemore, at present unoccupied, is a plain brick building, and commands extensive views of the surrounding country.

Henley Park, 73A. 1R. 11P. in extent, is the property of William Dalziel Mackenzie esq. but at present the residence of James Bland esq.; the house, pleasantly situated on an eminence overlooking the Thames valley, is ancient, but has been much modernized.

Edward Mackenzie esq. became lord of the manor of Henley by purchase in 1853; the manor is now held by his son, William Dalziel Mackenzie esq.

The area is 1,737 acres; rateable value £15,364; the population of the entire parish of Henley in 1881 was 3,692; corporate Town of Henley (part of the parish of Henley) 2,738. The population of the Henley Local Board District in 1881 was:

Part of the Parish of Henley . .	3,425
„ „ „ Rotherfield Greys . .	1,179
Total population of District .	4,604

NORTHFIELD END is a part of the parish.

Parish Clerk, Edward Jones.

HETHE (or HEATH) is a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 5 miles north-east from Bicester and 17 north-east from Oxford. The upper part of the village is separated from the lower by a small stream, which flows into the Ouse. The church of SS. Edmund and George is a small edifice of mixed styles, mostly Decorated, but very plain, and consists of chancel, nave, aisles and south porch and has been thoroughly restored and north aisle added, at a cost of about £800: the font is very ancient: there are sittings for 248 persons. The register dates from the year 1679; marriages, 1713. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £154 with residence and 167 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Lord Chancellor and held by the Rev. Thomas Waddon Martyn, late of Magdalen College, Oxford. There is a chapel for Wesleyan Methodists, and on the outskirts of the village a Catholic chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and built in 1831; it contains 5 stained windows, and is capable of seating 300 persons; the Catholic mission here, however, dates from a much earlier period. John Mansfield's charity of £3 4s. 4d. bequeathed in 1869, is for distribution in money, and there is £4 yearly for fuel; in 1874 Thomas Mansfield gave £150 in £3 per Cent. Consols to be divided equally among eight poor persons; by the will of Mary Waddington £538 10s. 2d. was left to be divided between 30 poor people of the parish, invested in £3 per Cents. Edward Slater Harrison esq. of Shelswell Park, is lord of the manor and the Earl of Effingham, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, the rector, J. S. Mansfield esq. and William Mansfield esq. are chief landowners. The soil is stone brash and gravel; a small portion is pasture and the remainder arable. The area is 1,049A. 0R. 18P.; rateable value, £1,352; the population in 1881 was 375.

LOWER HEYFORD (or HEYFORD PURCELL, or HEYFORD-AT-BRIDGE), with the hamlet of CAULCOTT, a mile and a half east-by-south, is a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 7 miles north-west from Bicester and 6 north-east from Woodstock. The village is situated on the Cherwell and close to the Oxford and Birmingham canal, which runs through the parish and is the point nearest to Bicester for the conveyance of goods by water. The Oxford and Birmingham branch of the Great Western railway passes through the parish parallel to the canal, on the west side of the village, where there is a station distant from London 75 miles. The church of St. Mary, placed on rising ground near the railway, is a structure of mixed styles and consists of chancel, nave, aisles, south porch and a plain western tower containing 5 bells: the chancel is Decorated, but the rest of the building Perpendicular and there is a screen of the latter period; the north wall exhibits a curious painting of the commandments, with the representation of a chancel as fitted in the time of Queen Elizabeth: the church was thoroughly restored in 1867. The register dates from the year 1539. The living is a rectory, net yearly value from 450 acres of glebe, £580, in the gift of Corpus Christi college, Oxford, and held since 1868 by the Rev. Henry Furneaux M.A. formerly fellow and tutor of that college. There is a chapel belonging to the United Methodist church in the village. There are 32 acres of land, awarded in 1802, producing £28 a year, which is given to the poor of the parish in coals. A market was formerly held here every Monday at the Bell public-house, but is now almost extinct; cattle and sheep sales are also held during the year, but there are no regular fairs. The President and scholars of Corpus Christi college, Oxford, are lords of the manor and principal landowners. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, the same. The land is pasture and arable. The area is 1,680 acres; rateable value, £3,219; the population in 1881 was 518, of which 141 were at Caulcott.

Parish Clerk, Thomas Perkins.

CAULCOTT (formerly Caldecote) is a hamlet, one mile east: here is a Wesleyan chapel.

UPPER HEYFORD (or HEYFORD WARREN), situated on the river Cherwell, is a parish 6 miles north-west from Bicester and 7 north-east from Woodstock, in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The Oxford and Birmingham canal and the Oxford and Birmingham railway run through the parish; the nearest railway station is Heyford, one mile south-west on the Oxford and Birmingham railway. The church of St. Mary, rebuilt in 1866, is a small structure of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, south aisle and an embattled tower; the south side is modern; the chancel has a Perpendicular window and a fine tomb with the effigy of a priest under a Decorated arch: the tower is plain Perpendicular, but lofty and well proportioned; on one of the buttresses are carved the arms of William of Wykeham, founder of New College, Oxford, and previous to the rebuilding of the church there was an hour glass near the pulpit bearing date 1618, which is now removed. The register dates from the year 1558. The living is a rectory, tithes commuted for £483, net yearly value £447, with 98 acres of glebe, let for £150, in the gift of New College, Oxford, and held since 1878 by the Rev. Edward Fox M.A. formerly fellow of that college. The Wesleyans have a chapel here. There are 19A. 3R. 34P. of allotment awarded in 1842 and producing £46 10s. 8d. yearly, which is distributed to the poor in coals and clothing the week before Christmas. In the upper and eastern part of the parish are a fosse and a vallum, which, Camden says, was first raised as a boundary between the Mercian and West Saxon kingdoms and the whole or part of it was called Aves (a corruption of Offa's) Ditch. In connection with the Manor House, occupied by Mr. L. T. Haynes, is a very ancient and curiously constructed barn built by William of Wykeham. The warden & scholars of New College, Oxford, who are lords of the manor, the Earl of Jersey and Mrs. Greaves are the principal landowners. The soil and subsoil in the upper parts are chiefly stone brash and in the lower parts are mixed. The land is partly pasture and partly arable. The area is 1,558 acres; rateable value, £2,621; the population in 1881 was 384.

Deputy Parish Clerk, George Carpenter.

HEYTHROP, with the hamlet of Dunthrop, is a parish and village 3 miles east from Chipping Norton, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Nicholas, erected in 1879-80, is an edifice in the Geometrical style, built partly of the materials of a Catholic church, which formerly stood in the park and stone quarried on the estate: it consists of chancel with organ chamber on the south side and vestry on the north, south aisle, nave of four bays and an embattled tower with crocketed pinnacles, at the west end of the south aisle containing 3 bells; its lower stage forming a porch: the chancel and sanctuary are paved with richly coloured Italian marble mosaic and the east window is stained: the altar, choir stalls, pulpit and lectern and reading desk are of oak with carved tracery in walnut wood and there is a parclose of carved oak parting the chancel and vestry: the entire cost of building, amounting to about £12,000, was defrayed by Albert Brassey esq. the patron, who also presented the site both for the church and rectory; A. W. Blomfield esq. M.A. was the architect: the nave of the old church was taken down and its fine Norman south door built into the arch of the chancel which is now used as a mortuary chapel; it contains several ancient monuments to the Talbot family and a brass to John Aschefeld esq. 1521 and his wife Elenor with four sons and four daughters; above this is a painted window with effigies of the same persons. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1607; marriages and burials, 1613. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £236 with residence, in the gift of Albert Brassey esq. and held since 1879 by the Rev. Arthur William Beaty Marshall B.A. of Emmanuel College, Cambridge. Heythrop House, a splendid mansion destroyed by fire during its occupation by the Duke of Beaufort, on the 24th of February, 1831, has been replaced by a stately and well-built structure of stone in the Italian style, which stands amidst extensive gardens and pleasure grounds, surrounded by a richly-timbered park of 300 acres and is the seat of Albert Brassey esq. J.P. the lord of the manor and sole landowner. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, brash rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley and roots. The area is 1,664 acres; rateable value, £2,720; the population in 1881 was 250.

DUNTHROP is a hamlet adjoining Heythrop, on the north.

Parish Clerk, John Owen.

HIGHMOOR is an ecclesiastical parish formed in 1860 out of the civil parishes of Rotherfield Greys and Bix; it is 2 miles north-west from Greys church and 4½ north-west from Henley-on-Thames, in Henley county court district and in the rural deanery of Henley and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Paul is a small structure in the Early English style, consisting of chancel and nave and was erected, together with the parsonage house, solely at the expense of the Rev. Joseph Smith B.D. the previous rector of this parish and was opened in 1859; Mr. Joseph Morris, of Reading, was the architect. The register dates from 1860. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £94 5s. with residence, in the gift of the rector and held since 1878 by the Rev. Thomas Henry Lee-Warner M.A. of St. Peter's College, Cambridge. Highmoor Hall, the seat of Miss Elwes, is a commodious mansion, surrounded by grounds, which are beautifully laid out. Lord Camoys, who is lord of the manor, and Mrs. Champion, of Nettlebed, are the principal landowners. The soil is chalk and gravel; subsoil, chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The population in 1871 was 341; the area is included in the parish of Rotherfield Greys.

HOLTON is a parish and pretty village 6 miles east from Oxford, 48 west from London and one mile north-east from Wheatley station, on the Great Western railway, in the hundred of Bullingdon, union of Headington, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Cuddesdon and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Bartholomew is an ancient cruciform building of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, transept and a western tower containing 3 bells, one of which is dated 1662, and another is inscribed "Sancta Anna ora pro nobis:" it appears to have been originally built towards the end of the 12th century, the church being rebuilt in the 14th, the nave remodeled and the tower added in the 15th century: the east window, of three lights, is Decorated, and has good flowing tracery, and in the south wall is a small piscina: the chancel arch is Transition Norman and near it remains the staircase to the rood loft; the south transept is believed to have been rebuilt and the church otherwise renovated by William Brome, to whom a brass, dated 1461, existed previously to 1819 in this transept: the nave has a good Transition Norman north door, with zig-zag and tooth ornament and on its eastern gable an open arched bell cote, in which hangs a sanctus bell: the tower is plain Perpendicular, with a simple parapet: this church is the burial place of the families of Brome and Whorwood, and of Schutz of Shotover House, and contains brasses to William Brome, builder of the chapel and a benefactor to the church, 1461, in armour, and to William Brome, 1599, æt. 10. The register dates from the year 1633, and contains the entry, June 15, 1646, of the marriage of Henry Ireton, commissary general to Sir Thomas Fairfax, to Bridget, daughter of Oliver Cromwell, at Lady Whorwood's house in Holton. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £370 with residence, and 24 acres of glebe, in the gift of W. E. Biscoe esq. and held since 1856 by the Rev. Henry Annesley Tyndale M.A. of Wadham College, Oxford. Holton Park is the seat of William Earle Biscoe esq. D.L., J.P. who is lord of the manor and principal landowner, and consists of about 200 acres. The soil is loam; subsoil, gravel and clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley and beans. The area is 1,594 acres; rateable value, £2,695; the population in 1881 was 237.

HOLWELL, formerly a chapelry in the parish of Bradwell, is now a separate ecclesiastical parish, formed in 1850; it is 3 miles south-west-by-south from Burford, and 4½ north-west from Alvescot station on the Oxford, Witney and Fairford railway, 8 west from Witney; the parish extends to Gloucestershire, in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The Roman road Akeman Street passes through a portion of the parish. The church of St. Mary, rebuilt at the sole expense of the late William Hervey esq. in 1842, is a small building in a debased modern Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, south porch, transepts and a small tower on the north side, containing one bell, dated 1847, and a sanctus bell dated 1856: the east window is of two lights, with cinquefoiled tracery: the pulpit has some very excellent ancient oak carving in the panels representing scriptural subjects. The register dates from the year 1846. The living is a vicarge, gross yearly value £110 with residence, in the gift of W. H. Fox esq. and held since 1860 by the Rev. Daniel Ward Goddard M.A. of Exeter College, Oxford. W. H. Fox esq. J.P. is lord of the manor and sole landowner. The soil is oolite; subsoil, rock overlying clay. The area is 1,045 acres; rateable valne, £1,154; the population in 1881 was 120.

Parish Clerk, Charles Buckingham.

HOOK NORTON is a parish, including the adjoining hamlet of SOUTHROP, on the borders of Warwickshire, 5 miles north-east-by-north from Chipping Norton and 8 south-west from Banbury, in the hundred of Chadlington, petty sessional division of Chipping Norton, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Peter, occupying a commanding situation near the centre of the village, was restored at a cost of about £2,500 in 1845, is a spacious and interesting edifice, originally Norman, and consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, south porch, north transept, and a western embattled tower, with six crocketed pinnacles, and containing 5 bells, dated respectively 1,600, 1797, 1799, 1869, and the tenor, which is inscribed, "Ye people all who hear me ring, Be faithful to your God and King," 1788: the chancel walls are Norman, the windows, modern round headed, have been inserted at a higher elevation; the Decorated east window was filled with stained glass in 1882 as a memorial to the Rev. John Richard Rushton D.D. 40 years rector here, who died January 26, 1881: near the spring of the chancel arch are the remains of late Norman corbels, and on the south side of the arch is the opening leading to a former rood loft, with the steps perfect: the roof of the nave, which rests on curious stone corbels, is rectilinear in style, as is also the clerestory, which has side lights and a large window at the east end over the chancel arch: the tower arch, a bold and somewhat singular work, is open, but enclosed by a screen, and more or less blocked by an inclined gallery for the school children: the nave is separated from the aisle by an arcade of four arches: in the nave are memorials and floor stones to the family of Lampet, 1781—1858: in the vestry, formed by enclosing a portion of the transept, is a monument to Anne, wife of Thomas Wise, 1703; and there is also here the western half, partly mutilated, of an Elizabethan tomb, with figures and arms, and the date 1560; the tomb is cut in two by a partition, and the remaining portion appears under and above a flight of wooden stairs leading up into a small gallery over the vestry; at the foot of these is a large stone in the floor, with the matrix of an effigy, an inscription in Lombardic characters to Dame Isabel de Plessi; an inscribed brass formerly in this church to John Bishop, ob. 29 May, 1497, and Isabelle his wife, was some time since in the hands of C. Faulkenor esq. F.S.A. of Deddington: the font is an Early Norman work of unique character, cylindrical, and surrounded with rude sculptures, in relief, of Adam and Eve, Sagittarius, and other zodiacal signs: there are sittings for 700 persons. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1560; marriages, 1729; burials, 1643. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £295 with residence and 129 acres of glebe, let for £200, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1881 by the Rev.

Alfred Vyvyan Cox M.A. of Wadham College, Oxford. The living escaped the spoliation of 1546, as being the subject of a long lease, but having been afterwards granted to the Duke of Northumberland by Edward VI. was restored to the see of Oxford by Queen Mary, on the attainder of the Duke; it subsequently passed, with the other estates of the bishopric, to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, but the right of presentation still remains with the bishop. Here is a Baptist chapel founded in 1644, and a Primitive Methodist chapel. The Wesleyan chapel, with vestry, a schoolroom for 80 children and offices, occupy a convenient site near the centre of the village; the foundation stones of this building, which is a neat rectangular structure in the Early English style, were laid by several ladies on 18th May, 1875; the walls are of local stone, with Bath stone dressings, and the schoolroom and vestry arranged on either side of the chapel open into it by movable partitions, so that the ordinary number of sittings, about 220, can, if necessary, be doubled: the front is enclosed by a low wall and ornamented with railings; the total cost, inclusive of site, was about £1,200. Mr. John Wells, of Derby and Kingsbridge, was the architect. The Society of Friends have also a meeting place. At Scotland End is a brewery, and there are several limekilns in the parish. The Duke of Suffolk left £140, the interest of which, amounting to 4 guineas a year is distributed in money to the poor, with 5s. from Calcott's charity, and the poor's allotments of 32 acres produce about four guineas yearly for fuel. There are other smaller charities for education and church purposes. About the year 917 (according to the Saxon Chronicle), in the reign of Edward the Elder, a battle was fought at or very near to Hook Horton between the Danes and the English; there are the remains of a camp near Hook Norton Lodge, about two miles north-east, twin tumuli, near Berry field, 1½ miles south-west near the road to Great Rollright, which Dr. Plot conjectures were formed on this occasion by the English; Florence of Worcester (who gives the year 914 as the date of this battle) calls Hook Norton "Regia Villa," a royal town or village. The manor of Hook Norton was bestowed by William the Conqueror on Robert de Oily, who at the period of the Domesday Survey held this and 27 other manors in Oxfordshire, besides many in the adjacent counties. In the year 1285, Ela Countess of Warwick was found to hold the manor of Hoke Norton of the King in capite, upon the serjeanty of carving before the king at Christmas, and to have the knife with which she carved. The trustees of Baroness Wenman are lords of the manor; the principal landowners are W. C. Faulkner esq. and R. S. B. Davis esq. There is an abundant supply of spring water in the parish and neighbourhood. The soil in the higher portion of the parish consists partly of the upper oolite, and in the lower portions of the lower oolite and red loam, under which there is a deposit of iron-stone, containing a considerable percentage of iron. An Act was obtained in 1865 to enable the Cheltenham and Banbury Railway Company to form a line to Chipping Norton, close to the village; the line, so far as at present constructed, passes through an open cutting half a mile long, and for some distance 76 feet deep, and it is intended to cross the valley on an embankment 85 feet high: the enterprise is at present (1883) in abeyance, no progress having been made with the works since 1877. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans, peas, oats and roots. The area is 5,298 acres; rateable value, £8,954; the population in 1881 was 1,232.

Parish Clerk, Dalby Phipps.

HORLEY is a parish and village on the borders of Warwickshire, 4 miles north-west from Banbury and about 27 north-west from Oxford, in the hundred of Bloxham, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Ethelreda is principally in the Early English and Decorated styles, with a few vestiges of late Norman; it consists of chancel, low nave, south porch and a clerestoried embattled central tower, of the Decorated period, containing 4 bells; in the chancel, which is of the same date, is a piscina of Early English date, recently restored by the Rev. R. J. Buddicom, in excellent preservation, and on the wall of the north aisle a large fresco, representing the legend of St. Christopher; the saint, a colossal figure, with Christ on his shoulders, is fording the river, supporting himself and his burden by a thick staff, which bends beneath the weight: the Saint turns to Christ and says:—

"What art thou, and art so yynge?
Bar I never so hevy a thynge."

Christ replies:—

"Yey, I be hevy, no wunther nys,
For I am the kynge of blys."

The north aisle is Early Perpendicular, but all three doorways are very good examples of Early English: the arcades dividing the nave and aisles each consist of four lofty arches on alternately round and octagonal pillars: the old Norman tub font has been restored and placed at the west end of the nave. The register dates from the year 1538. The living is a vicarage, united with Hornton, joint net yearly value £450 with residence and 245 acres of glebe, let for £455, in the gift of the Lord Chancellor, and held since 1879 by the Rev. Charles Heaven B.A. of St. Peter's College, Cambridge. The Wesleyans have a chapel here. Bray and Saul's charities produce about £1 a year for the benefit of the poor. Miss C. Stuart, who is lady of the manor, Rev. Sir William Henry Cope bart. and John Hitchcock esq. are the principal landowners. The soil is red loam; subsoil, brown oolite. The crops are general. The area is 1,113A. OR. 9P.; rateable value, £2,038; the population in 1881 was 315.

HORNTON is a village and parish on the borders of Warwickshire, 5½ miles north-west from Banbury, 28½ north-west from Oxford, in the hundred of Bloxham, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. John the Baptist is a very ancient structure in the Norman, Early English and Decorated styles, consisting of chancel, nave, aisle and a western tower containing 5 bells: the chancel is Early English, with some remains of Norman work and has a Perpendicular east window: the nave arcade on the south side is Decorated and on the north Transition Norman: the tower is Early English and Decorated and has a square turret: a good Perpendicular parclose screen remains in the south aisle, where there was once a chantry: there is a small brass of the time of Henry VIII. to the memory of a yeoman and his son, and on the wall at the east end of the south aisle are the remains of a fourteenth century fresco, representing the Virgin and Child with the kneeling figure of a bishop, and almost every part of the church bears evidence of its having once been highly ornamented in colour and gilding: the font is Transition Norman and was also coloured. The register of baptisms and burials dates from 1703; the marriages are in the Horley register. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Horley, joint net yearly value £450, in the gift of the Lord Chancellor, and held since 1879 by the Rev. Charles Heaven B.A. of St. Peter's College, Cambridge. Here is a chapel for Primitive Methodists. Miss C. Stuart is lady of the manor. The principal landowners are Mr. John Gibbs, Mr. Richard Reading, Mr. William Roberts and the trustees of the late Mr. John Wilcox. The soil is red loam; subsoil, brown oolite. The crops are general. The area is 1,412 acres; rateable value, £2,729; the population in 1881 was 500.

HORSEPATH in Domesday "Horspadan," is a parish in the hundred of Bullingdon, union of Headington, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Cuddesdon and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 4 miles south-south-east from Oxford and 2 west from Wheatley station on the Great Western railway. The church of St. Giles is an ancient structure of mixed styles, the nave of which was built about the end of the twelfth century; it consists of chancel, clerestoried south aisle with porch, south transept, nave and an embattled western tower with turret at the south-west angle and containing 6 bells: the chancel was rebuilt in 1840, in the Early English style: the nave has an arcade of four arches on square pillars and a modern clerestory: built into the western wall of the tower, within the church, are two curious figures, one with upraised hands and the other holding a bagpipe; these are said to represent a certain Thomas London and his wife, who are said to have built the tower: in the nave near the pulpit is a small stained window, with the figure of a man holding a boar's head on the point of a spear and taken to represent one of the former lords of Boarstall: the font, standing near the central pillar of the arcade, is hexagonal and stands on a circular base of two steps: in the south aisle, near the door, is a unique stoup, consisting of an octagonal cylinder with moulded rim, on a high base of similar shape: the south transept was probably built in the thirteenth century and has at the south end a singular two-light window; in its east wall is a piscina and near it a bracket: in the north chancel window are the arms of Magdalen College, and in the south, the figures of St. Mary and St. John. The register dates from the year 1561. The living is a vicarage, yearly value £145 with residence, in the gift of the President and fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford and held since 1861 by the Rev. Henry Ramsden Bramley M.A. fellow and tutor of that college, who resides at Magdalen College, Oxford. A small Wesleyan chapel was built here in 1871. There are charities of about £3 a year for distribution in money and fuel. The Earl of Macclesfield is lord of the manor. The principal landowner are the widow of the Right Rev. T. B. Morrell, late coadjutor Bishop of Edinburgh, F. J. Morrell esq. Magdalen and Corpus Christi colleges, Oxford, and Arthur A. Prickard esq. The soil is clay and loam; subsoil, sand, clay and gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley and beans. The area is 1,164 acres; rateable value, £2,017; the population in 1881 was 324.

IFFLEY, in Domesday "Givetelei," is a parish in the hundred of Bullingdon, union of Headington, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Cuddesdon and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, a mile and three quarters south-south-east from Oxford, on the Isis. Ingram (Memorials of Oxford) derives the name from Anglo-Saxon, giftalega, "field of gifts," but the termination "ey" or "ea," an island, points, in the opinion of the Rev. Isaac Taylor, rather to a period when the river spread its waters more widely, and circled around many marshy islands. The church of St. Mary is an ancient structure exhibiting some of the purest and most perfect specimens of enriched Norman architecture extant, and is supposed to have been erected by Robert de Cheney, Bishop of Lincoln, 1147 to 1173: the building consists of chancel and nave with a massive embattled tower in the centre containing 6 bells, of which the two first date from 1785, the third cast in 1592, was re-cast in 1869, the fourth is inscribed "Praise ye Lorde," the last two were cast in 1642, and there is a sanctus bell, dated 1709: the west front is of three stages, the lowest having a deeply recessed doorway with richly carved chevron and beak mouldings, on either side of which is a blank round-headed arch; the second stage contains a circular window, with chevron mouldings, restored by Dr. Warbnrton, late vicar, from a design by Mr. Buckler, architect of Oxford: above this are three windows in line with shafts and capitals and highly enriched mouldings of similar character, and in the apex of the gable a single-light window: the north and south doorways are also Norman with ornamented piers and capitals; only the two west windows on either side the nave remain in their original state, but the mouldings of the others remain in the interior: the tower arches spring from piers with cushioned capitals and shafts of black marble in the angles; the arches themselves are recessed and elaborately carved with flowers and zigzag work: in the church is an altar tomb, once bearing several brasses, to Arthur Pitts, M.C.L., Fellow of All Souls and registrar of the diocese, 1579; there is also a memorial to Barton Holyday D.D. archdeacon of Oxford,1641;and on the south side of the chancel lies buried the celebrated Saxon scholar, Edward Thwaites, fellow of of Qneen's College, who died in 1711; on the exterior north wall is a monument to John Smith, yeoman, 1659, and Alice his wife, 1678, a benefactress to the parish; Stephen Field, also a benefactor, is buried south-east of the chancel: the western gable of the church was re-built in 1823 by Mr. Robert Bliss, a bookseller of Oxford; and about 1825 the Perpendicular chancel screen was removed: in 1844 more extensive repairs were made by Mr. Hussey, architect, when the western gable was re-constructed, the nave roof raised to its original height, and the stone pulpit steps taken away: in 1858 the chancel was restored,nnder the direction of Mr.Ewan Christian;the church will hold about220 persons: the chancel is vaulted with stone and groined, and consists of two bays, the westernmost being Norman and the second Early English, added, it is supposed, to the original church by Robert de Efleley, prior of Kenilworth,1266-76,and a native of this place; this has a locker, piscina and sedilia of the same date; the later windows in the chancel are of the thirteenth century, but in the Norman portion the mouldings of the ancient windows remain; in the tower and nave four good Perpendicular windows have been inserted within the Norman mouldings; these are supposed to have been added by John de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk, 1463-91, and Elizabeth of York, his wife, whose arms appear in the south-western window: the tower has, in the belfry story, two Norman windows on each side, and a turret at the north-west corner; in the centre of the north row of battlements is the figure of an ox: the south-east window of the nave has the arms of Fettiplace: a collection of fragments from the old west window have been arranged together in a shield-like form and placed in another window in the nave: the font, a very early and curious example of black marble, is about 3 feet 6 inches square, supported on a short circular stone pedestal with four smaller ones at the angles, three of which are twisted, the whole rests on a square base: in the churchyard, on the south side, is a cross, the base and shaft of which are ancient; in 1857 it was admirably restored by Mr. Earp from a drawing furnished by the late G. E. Street esq. R.A., near it is a venerable yew tree of considerable size: the communion plate includes a chalice "augmented" by Mr. Newlin and others of his family in 1679, a flagon and alms-plate given by the Rev. Thomas West in 1773, another alms-plate by Mr. Allin, of Littlemore, in 1773, and a paten given by John Parsons, jun. esq. 1844. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1572; marriages, 1574. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £297 with residence and 30 acres of glebe, and is officially in the gift of the Archdeacon of Oxford, being the only benefice to which he presents by virtne of his office, and held by the Rev. Edward Clayton M.A. of Christ Church, Oxford and hon. Canon of Chester. By an order in Council, made June 6th, 1859, the rectorial house and garden, a field and orchard near, abutting on the street, and another field situated about a mile from Oxford, together with the churchyard, were transferred to the perpetual curate who is now, under the provisions of the Act 31 & 32, Vict. c. 117, styled "Vicar"; since this arrangement was made, a high wall, separating the churchyard from the rectory garden, has been in part removed, and in 1870 an addition was made to the east end of the churchyard and consecrated on Easter Monday, April 18th, in that year. The rectory house is a building of Late Perpendicular date and may have been built by one of the Pitts family who were lessees of the estate for aconsiderable period; the south-east portion is earlier and contains a curious buttery hatch and some good oak panelling. The sum of £211 derived from a charity administered under the will of Alice Smith, widow, of Iffley, dated 26th Nov. 1678; £80 is appropriated yearly in apprentice fees and the residue to the general uses of the poor. Field's charity of about £7 yearly, left by the will of Stephen Field, of Littlemore, in 1727, is for bread; Rev. Thomas Nowell's charity, bequeathed by the Rev. Thomas Nowell D.D. by will dated 27th Nov. 1800, provides £34 for the schoolmistress and books for scholars. There has been a mill here from a remote period, and the Iffley mill of today is perhaps more famous than any other spot near Oxford for its picturesqueness and the long continued and never tiring homage it has received from artists of every kind; it belongs, together with a house, land and certain rights appertaining to the towing path and navigation of the Thames, to Lincoln College. Other estates here are held by Magdalen, Brasenose, Oriel and Pembroke Colleges. The Knights Templars had property here in the thirteenth century. The governors of Donnington Hospital, Berks, are the lords of the manor and principal landowners. The soil is loam and clay; subsoil, sand and gravel. The chief crops are wheat and barley. The area is 410 acres; rateable value, £4,836; the population (including the liberty of Littlemore) in 1871 was 990, and in 1881 was 989.

IPSDEN is a parish and picturesque village, situated close to the Chiltern Hills, 3½ miles south-east from Wallingford, in the hundred of Langtree, union of Henley, county court district of Wallingford, rural deanery of Henley and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The old Roman Icknield road or Ickleton way, passes through the parish. The church of St. Mary, originally a chapel of the mother church of North Stoke, is an edifice of considerable antiquity, consisting of chancel, nave, with north chapel, south porch and a bell turret of wood: the chancel is of the Early English style, rather rude with a small and poor chancel arch, resting on single polished shafts with floriated caps: the nave is of the same period and originally had a south aisle, with an arcade of five Pointed arches, but this has been destroyed and the arches filled up: the nave roof is Perpendicular with moulded tie beams and a battlemented cornice: the chapel on the north side is separated from the nave by two Pointed arches; the walls are Early English and Perpendicular and within, on the west and north, have a stone bench attached: it has a Decorated roof: the font is round, plain and of rough material: there are brass effigies with inscription to "Master Thomas Englysche," in armour and Isbell his wife, both of whom died in 1525; both figures are palimpsests; the male effigy exhibiting on the reverse side, the upper part of a female figure, c. 1420; and the other part of a Latin verse inscription to . . . . t Stapilton, wife of John: a stained window in memory of Malcolm and Winwoode Reade, sons of W. B. Reade esq. of Ipsden House, has been placed in the north aisle. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1569; marriages, 1695. The living is a vicarage consolidated with that of North Stoke, together with the rectory of Newnham-Murren, joint net yearly value £568 with residence and 23 acres of glebe, in the gift of St. John's College, Cambridge, and held since 1872 by the Rev. Charles Stanwell M.A. formerly fellow of that college. The great tithes of Ipsden and North Stoke belong to St. John's College, Cambridge. Three cottages and 7 acres and more of land, now producing £14 yearly, were left by the Rev. Richard Headlam, in 1729, the produce to be distributed annually at Christmas in clothing to poor men of Ipsden and Stoke Row; in 1875 W. J. Dodd, esq. bequeathed the sum of £400 to be invested in Government securities, the proceeds to be annually distributed in flannels and blankets. Ipsden House is the seat of Edward Anderdon Reade esq. C.B., J.P. The Rev. Henry St. John Reade is lord of the manor and chief landowner. The soil is light loam; subsoil, chalk. The chief crops are wheat and barley. The area is 3,374 acres; rateable value, £4,291 15s. 4d.; the population in 1881 was 302.

ISLIP (A. S. Githeslepe, the leap of Githa) is a parish and station on the Oxford and Bletchley branch of the London and North Western railway, 56 miles from London, 6½ south-east from Woodstock, 7 north-east from Oxford and 6½ south-west from Bicester, in the hundred of Ploughley, Bicester union and county court district, rural deanery of Islip and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situated on the northern bank of the river Ray near its confluence with the Cherwell: a good balustraded bridge of four arches crosses the former immediately below the church. The church of St. Nicholas is an edifice chiefly of the fourteenth century, little if any part of the ancient Saxon church now remaining, although the pillars and arches on the north side of the nave are Transition Norman, and belong to a period considerably earlier than the rest of the building: the church consists of chancel, nave, aisles, south porch and a lofty western embattled tower with crocketed pinnacles, containing a clock and 6 bells; the chancel, destroyed during the civil wars, was rebuilt in 1680 by Dr. Robert South, rector from 1678 to 1716, as appears from an inscription on one of the beams of the roof: it contains inscriptions on brass to John Aglionby D.D. rector, 1600-9; and James Harraches, rector, 1609-25; a brass with figures of a man and woman kneeling before a table with nine boys and ten girls, inscribed to Henry Norris esq. 1637; Robert Banks gent. 1605 and Susanna, successively wife of both, 1634; between the figures and below are the quartered arms of Morris: on the south wall are marble tablets to Edward Dewe gent. 1656, with arms; and Luke Clapham esq. of Gray's inn, 1676 and Susanna his wife, 1669; on the floor of the chancel was formerly a brass, inscribed with four Latin lines, to Edmund, a monk of St. Alban's: about 1840 some ancient frescoes were discovered on the wall of the south aisle, the largest and most conspicuous of which represents the adoration of the Magi, another exhibits St. Michael weighing a soul and there are several other paintings on the wall of the north aisle: in the south aisle is a Decorated piscina: the font is octagonal and Perpendicular: in 1860 the church was restored throughout and the chancel entirely rebuilt; it contains a beautiful memorial window to Dr. Buckland, dean of Westminster, for some time rector of this parish, who died 14th August, 1856 and is buried here. The register dates from May 4th, the year 1590. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £450 with residence and 28 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster and held since 1875 by the Rev. Thomas Welbank Fowle M.A. of Oriel College, Oxford. Among the former rectors may be noticed Robert Weston, 1508-11, afterwards dean of Wells and chancellor of Ireland; Hugh Lloyd, 1578-98, chancellor of Rochester; Thomas Ravis S.T.P. 1598-1600, vice-chancellor of Oxford University; John Aglionly, 1600-9, Principal of St. Edmund Hall; Peter Heylin, 1625-38, sub-dean of Westminster; William Vincent D.D. 1807-15, dean of Westminster; John Ireland, 1815, also dean and the Rev. F. Chenevix Trench, 1857-75, who issued, during his incumbency, a series of papers, entitled "Islipiana." The rectory house was built in 1690 by Dr. South and is a conspicuous object on approaching the village from Oxford. Here is a small Wesleyan chapel. Dr. South, besides endowing the school, also gave £30 yearly for apprenticing two boys and £15 yearly for distribution to poor widows; Litchfield's augmentation to charity provides about £16 a year for educational purposes and about £15 yearly for clothing; Dennitt's charity of £8 is for apprenticing, and another gift by Mr. William Augur in 1688, produces £1 11s. 6d. a year, which is expended in bread. Islip is chiefly famous as having been the birthplace of Edward the Confessor, who was born here about A.D. 1004, in a royal residence erected by his father, King Ethelred and afterwards nursed and brought up in the palace or mansion at Headington: no memorial of the Confessor remains here except the ancient font in which he is traditionally said to have been baptized, and now standing in the rectory garden; this object is, however, of the fourteenth century, octangular in shape and ornamental with irregular tracery, it is five feet in height and bears a mutilated inscription in capitals recording the tradition. During the Civil War, Islip was frequently visited by portions of the opposing forces, and in 1644-5, several serious engagements took place in and near the village. The Dean and Chapter of Westminster are lords of the manor. The principal landowners are the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The soil is clay and sand; subsoil, clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and beans. The area is 1,960 acres; rateable value, £3,489; the population in 1881 was 600.

KELMSCOT is a chapelry and township belonging to the parish of Bradwell, in the hundred of Bampton and union of Faringdon, county court district of Faringdon, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, and on the river Isis and Gloucester and Berks border, 4 miles north from Faringdon, 4½ south-west from Bampton and 2½ east from Lechlade railway station on the Oxford, Witney and Fairford line. The church of St. George is a small and very ancient cruciform building in the Norman and later styles, consisting of chancel, nave, a very narrow north aisle, transepts, south porch and a bell-turret containing 2 bells: in the chancel are floor stones and tablets of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, with Latin inscriptions, in good preservation, to the Turner family, formerly of the Manor House: the nave is separated from the north aisle by an arcade of four Late Norman arches: the south doorway and font, a plain cylindrical work, are also Norman. The register dates from the year 1601. The living is a chapelry, annexed to Bradwell vicarage, joint gross yearly value £300, in the gift of Sir William Henry Smith-Marriott bart. and held since 1870 by the Rev. Horace Meeres M.A. of Exeter College, Oxford, who resides at Bradwell. The Manor House is a fine Elizabethan building and contains a room entirely fitted with old tapestry. Mrs. James Turner, who is lady of the manor, George Millward esq. and Mrs. Millward are the principal landowners. The soil is gravel and black loam: subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. The area is 1,002 acres; rateable value, £1,351. the population in 1881 was 101.

KENCOTT is a parish and village 5 miles north-east from Lechlade, 4 west from Bampton, 1½ from Alvescot station, in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. George is a small but ancient structure in the Norman and later styles, consisting of chancel and nave and a western tower containing 3 bells: the chancel is Early English and retains its piscina; the chancel arch is a mixture of Norman and Decorated work: the south doorway, also of Norman date, has a tympanum filled with flat sculpture, representing a centaur shooting an arrow down the throat of a monster, with the word "Sagittarius," cut in the stone: the font bears date 1642. The register dates from the year 1584. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £320 with residence, in the gift of H. Hammersley esq. and held since 1867 by the Rev. Robert Henry Earle M.A. of St. John's College, Oxford. Charles Large esq. is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are Mrs. Faulkner, Mrs. Large and the rector. The soil is stone brash. The chief crops are the usual cereals. The area is 770 acres; rateable value, £1,502; the population in 1881 was 202.

KIDDINGTON is a parish consisting of the hamlets of NETHER KIDDINGTON in Wootton hundred, and OVER KIDDINGTON in Chadlington hundred. They are pleasantly situated on the river Glyme, which separates them, 5 north-west from Woodstock, 6 west from Heyford railway station, on the Great Western railway and 5 north-east from Charlbury station, on the Oxford and Worcester railway, in Woodstock union and county court district, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Nicholas is an ancient structure of mixed styles, with some Norman portions, but chiefly Decorated, consisting of chancel, nave, south transept or chapel and a western tower containing 4 bells: the chancel is Norman and Decorated and has a sedile and piscina: the rood loft stairs remain and part of the screen: the font is a hexagon of good Decorated work, and the south chapel has a plain open-timbered roof of the same date: there is an ancient brass to Walter Goodere, a former rector, 1513 and a stained window in the transept to the memory of Mrs. Gaskell, who died 27th December, 1872: the church was restored and decorated in 1879. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1573; marriages, 1576; burials, 1570. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value, from tithe rent charge £426 with residence, in the gift of Viscount Dillon and held since 1878 by the Rev. Thomas Fawcett Burra M.A. of University College, Oxford. In the "upper town" remains the shaft and base of an ancient cross; various British, Roman and Saxon remains have been found here. Kiddington Hall, the seat of Henry Lomax Gaskell esq. D.L., J.P. who is lord of the manor and principal andowner, is a handsome residence built in 1673, by Sir Henry Browne bart. and modified about 1750, surrounded by lawns and park through which the river Glyme winds. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, stone brash. The land is chiefly arable; crops, barley and wheat. The area is 2,450 acres; rateable value (including Asterleigh), £2,961; and the population in 1881 was 270.

ASTERLEIGH is a civil parish, which consists of one farm, H. L. Haskell esq. is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The population in 1881 was 52; area, 281 acres; rateable value, £387. The church is believed to have stood in a field now called "Chapelbreke," it was dedicated to St. Peter, and the living, a rectory valued at £5, was incorporated with that of Kiddington, October 26th, 1466.

KIDLINGTON is a large village and parish within the parliamentary borough of Woodstock, situated on the Cherwell, in the hundred of Wootton, Woodstock union and county court district, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 5 miles north from Oxford and 4 south-east from Woodstock. The Woodstock road station, 69 miles from London, on the Great Western railway, is in this parish, three quarters of a mile distant from the village; there is also a station on the same line at Kirtlington, 2 miles distant. The Oxford canal passes through the parish. The church of St. Mary is a very spacious and beautiful cruciform edifice of mixed styles, but chiefly of the Decorated period and consisting of chancel with aisles, separated from it by two arches on either side, a central tower and spire, north and south transepts, nave and south aisle with porch: the chancel is Decorated and has a piscina and three Perpendicular sedilia: the east window of three lights is also of this date and is filled with fragments of stained glass collected from various parts of the church: the south window contains modern shields of arms: the chancel is enclosed with good Perpendicular screens, and there are stalls with finely carved poppyheads and some richly panelled desks, carved with the sacred monogram and the Pelican: in the south chancel aisle is a Decorated piscina and in the sill of the window a stone bench: the roof is high and open and the north aisle is similar in style to the south, differing only in the tracery of the windows: the tower is Early English and terminates in an open parapet, from within which rises a tall ribbed spire: the tower contains 6 bells, five of which were recast in 1715 and a smaller one added in 1800: the north transept has a Perpendicular clerestory, and retains an elegant piscina, with canopy and pinnacles: under the east window of the south transept are indications of an altar, of which the brackets remain; and here is a similar piscina and a sedile recess: in the west wall is a doorway: the nave is lofty and has a Perpendicular clerestory and roof: on the north side is a good Early English doorway, known as the "Bachelors' door," and a good Perpendicular niche: the clerestory is a later addition: the arcade separating the nave and south aisle is of five arches, Decorated and becoming gradually lower and narrower as they approach the west end: the east respond has a plain piscina; the font standing near the south door is plain round Decorated, on a moulded base: the pulpit of carved oak is Elizabethan: the south porch has its outer arch richly decorated with the ball flower ornament, and above it is a niche with rich crocketed canopy and pinnacles: there is a stained window at the west end, erected in 1858 to the memory of the late vicar, Joseph Loscombe Richards D.D. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1579; marriages and burials, 1574. The living is a vicarage of the yearly value of about £320 with 209 acres of glebe with residence, annexed during the life of the present rector to the rectorship of Exeter College, Oxford, and held since 1854 by the Rev. John Prideaux Lightfoot D.D. rector of Exeter, and hon. canon of Peterborough, at whose death the vicarage will be in the gift of the College. The Wesleyans have a chapel here. An hospital endowed with £13 yearly was erected in 1671 by Sir William Moreton Kt. Justice of the Common Pleas, in memory of the "pious and virtuous Lady Anne Moreton and her deceased children;" it is a simple, cottage-like building and is intended for six persons. £5 5s. yearly from several charities is distributed in bread, and there is a yearly sum of £4 for certain sermons. Grove House is the residence of Bryan J. Stapleton esq. The Manor House, now a farm, is a picturesquely gabled building, with a projecting porch and a fine bay window; during the civil wars it was the residence of Lord Lovelace. The Duke of Marlborough, who is lord of the manor, Exeter College, Oxford and Frederick Morrell esq. are the principal landowners. The soil is gravel and clay; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and beans. The acreage (including the hamlets) is 4,860; rateable value, £6,514; the population in 1881 was 1,087.

GOSFORD, ½ mile, is a hamlet with a population in 1881 of 40.

THRUP, 1¼ miles, is a hamlet within the parliamentary borough of Woodstock. Here is a small Baptist chapel built in 1876. The population in 1881 was 139.

WATER EATON is a parochial chapelry 4 miles north from Oxford, on the Cherwell. The chapel, originally attached to the Manor House, is a remarkably good example of revived Gothic of the time of James I.: the windows are somewhat in imitation of the Decorated style and are very good for that period; the chapel consists simply of chancel, with an east window of five lights and nave with south door and bell gable, containing 1 bell; the screen, seats and pulpit are all of Decorated character. The population in 1881 was 128; the area is 1,630 acres; rateable value, £2,503.

KIDMORE is a hamlet and ecclesiastical parish formed in 1854 out of portions of the civil parishes of Shiplake, Sonning and Caversham, 4 miles north from Reading and 5 miles south-west from Henley-on-Thames, in the union of Henley-on-Thames, county court district of Reading, rural deanery of Henley, and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. John the Baptist, built in 1852, is an excellent specimen of modern Early English architecture and consists of chancel and nave: all the windows are stained and include a memorial window of four lights, representing the four Christian graces, presented to the church by C. M. Worthington esq. of Dyson's Wood. The register dates from the year 1854. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £250 with residence and 10 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford, and held since 1871 by the Rev. Arthur Smith Sturges M.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge; an additional £100 a year was added to the living in May, 1877, by Miss Palmer, of Holme Park, Sonning and £50 by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The principal landowners are William Henry Vanderstegen esq. D.L., J.P. and W. D. Mackenzie esq. The soil is mixed, principally gravel; subsoil, chalk, gravel and loam; the chief crops are corn and roots; the population in 1881 was 682.

KINGHAM is a parish and village on the borders of Gloucestershire, 4½ miles south-west from Chipping Norton, one mile from the Chipping Norton Junction station of the Great Western railway, in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Andrew, an edifice chiefly in the Decorated and Perpendicular styles, consists of chancel, nave, aisles, south porch, and a western embattled tower of Perpendicular date, with pinnacles at the angles, and containing a clock and 6 bells: in the south wall of the chancel are sedilia and piscina: the east window was erected in 1843 to the daughter of the late and sister of the present rector: outside the chancel, on the north side, is a Decorated tomb under a canopy, attached to a wall, with a stone coffin: the south aisle and porch were erected as a memorial to members of his family, by the Rev. John William Lockwood, late rector, to whose memory a new organ was placed in the church in 1882; the church was partially restored in 1868; all the windows, most of which are memorials, are stained; there is one brass to Catherine James, 1588, with children. The register dates from the year 1646. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £720 with residence and 75 acres of glebe, in the gift of and held since 1880 by the Rev. Samuel Davis Lockwood B.A. of St. Mary Hall, Oxford; the rectory house was built by an ancestor of the present rector in 1680. There is a reading-room for the benefit of the parishioners. There is an allotment of 5 acres for the benefit of the poor, and there are charities to the amount of about £42 yearly, left by members of the rector's family and others and distributed in coals, bread, clothing and blankets to the poor at Christmas. The principal landowners are the Earl of Ducie, Robert N. Byass esq. New College, Oxford, who are lords of the manor and the Rev. S. D. Lockwood. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans, peas, roots and meadow grass. The area is 1,877 acres; rateable value, £4,406; the population in 1881 was 617.

KIRTLINGTON is a parish and railway station in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford; the village is situated on the road from Bicester to Woodstock, 6 miles south-west from the former and 4 north-east from the latter. The river Cherwell separates the parish from that of Tackley, and the Oxford canal runs parallel with the river. The Great Western (Oxford and Birmingham) railway passes through the parish, and the Kirtlington station is about a mile and a half south-west from the village, but in the parish of Bletchington, 71 miles from London. The church of St. Mary, a structure of mixed styles, consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, a ladye chapel or chantry, south porch, and a central tower containing a clock and 8 bells: the original church consisted simply of a chancel and tower, which has been twice rebuilt: the present chancel is Norman, with side windows of that date, and a Decorated east window of five lights forming a memorial to Marianne Sarah, widow of the late Sir George Dashwood bart. 1877: three of the arches supporting the tower are Norman, the fourth Decorated, and the ceiling is groined: the nave together with both the aisles, appears to have been added about the middle of the fourteenth century, but the south aisle was rebuilt by Sir Robert Dashwood bart. and the ladye chapel assigned by faculty to him and his heirs, about 1720: the nave has three Early English arches on each side, and a Perpendicular clerestory: in the south aisle is a piscina, with drain on a foliaged corbel, c. 1220, the church underwent very extensive repairs in 1853, the tower being rebuilt on the original foundation, and the bells, three of which had been dismounted for 80 years, were re-hung; the interior was cleared of the square pews and heavy galleries which disfigured it, and fitted with open benches, all of which in the nave are free: in 1877 the chancel was rebuilt at the expense of Sir Henry and Lady Dashwood under the direction of the late Sir G. G. Scott R.A. and substantially roofed with oak. The register dates from the year 1558. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value, from 235 acres of glebe, £430 with residence, in the gift of St. John's College, Oxford, and held since 1858 by the Rev. Thomas Knapp Chittenden D.D. formerly founder's kin fellow and bursar of that college. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. There are two charities amounting together to £75 yearly, for the relief of widows and for the aged poor. A great Synod or Council is said to have been held here in A.D. 977 at which King Edward the Martyr and St. Dunstan, archbishop of Canterbury, were present; Kirtlington was then a frontier town between the Mercian and West Saxon kingdoms, and much frequented on account of the port-way which led through it. Kirtlington Park, the seat of Sir Henry William Dashwood bart. J.P., D.L. is a noble mansion in the Italian style, erected in 1746 by Sir James Dashwood, great-grandfather of the present bart.; it stands in a finely-wooded park of 700 acres and commands an extensive prospect. Sir H. W. Dashwood bart. who is lord of the manor, and Major F. L. Dashwood J.P. are the principal landowners. The soil is stone brash and clay; subsoil, stone brash, clay and gravel. The land is chiefly arable; chief crop, barley. The area is 2,500 acres; rateable value, £4,898; the population in 1881 was 718.

LANGFORD is a parish and village 4 miles east from Lechlade and 5 north from Faringdon, in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Faringdon, rural deanery of Witney, and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. A portion of this was formerly in Berkshire, but by the Acts 2 and 3 Wm. IV. cap. 64, and 7 and 8 Vict. cap. 61, it now forms part of Oxfordshire; the hamlets of GRAFTON and RADCOT are an integral part of Oxon. The parish extends from the Gloucester border on the north-west to the Isis, and Berkshire on south-east, and is intersected by the Oxford, Witney and Fairford railway, the nearest stations being at Alvescot and Lechlade. The church of St. Mary is an ancient structure in the Norman and later styles, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, and a tower of Norman date between the chancel and nave: the chancel is Early English, with a canopied priest's door, and a piscina on the north side, and on the south a Perpendicular aumbry: the nave has elegant arches of Transitional character and the south porch, also of this period, has two curious and interesting sculptures of the Crucifixion, one on the south face over the entrance, and the other on the east side, both being enclosed in recessed cruciform panels: the church was restored in 1867. The register dates from the year 1538. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value about £330 with residence and 106 acres of glebe, in the gift of and held since 1855 by the Rev. Francis Gregory Lemann M.A. of King's College, Cambridge. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners are lay impropriators. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel, and a Congregational chapel built in 1848. The principal landed proprietors are the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, who are also lords of the manor. The soil is clay and gravel; subsoil, the same. The crops are the usual cereals and roots. The area is 2,210 acres; rateable value of Langford is £2932; the total population in 1881 was 474, of which 384 are in Lanford township.

LAUNTON is a parish on the borders of Bucks, with station on the Oxford and Bletchley branch of the London and North Western railway, 64 miles from London, 1½ miles east from Bicester and about 13 north-east from Oxford, in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Mary is a structure of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, south porch and western tower of Early English date, containing 5 bells, four of which were cast in 1701, and the fifth in 1712; there is also a sanctus bell: the chancel is Perpendicular and has two sedilia and a piscina: the nave arcades have Transition Norman arches, supporting a Perpendicular clerestory: there is a brass to Sir Matthew Shawe, priest, c. 1520; and the matrix of a cross fleurée, with inscription to Mr. Richard Glassyer, priest, sixteenth century; two other brasses, mentioned by Dunkin, are now lost; there are various memorials to John Cottisford gent. 1683, and Mary (Hyde) his wife, 1668; Mary Duley, 1736: opposite the porch remains the shaft of a broken cross, and at the east end is a railed tomb to Lancelot Jackson D.D. rector of Bletchingdon, 1750; the whole is fitted with open sittings in oak, the pews having been removed in the year 1844, at the rector's expense; the font is plain Early English. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1648; marriages, 1671; burials, 1681: but the earlier portion consists of entries recovered by the exertions of the Rev. Philip Stubbs, then rector, after the earlier registers had been destroyed by a fire which broke out in and burnt down a part of the Rectory House in the year 1714; these he inserted in a new volume; and from 1714 the entries go on regularly. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £650 with residence and 458 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1850 by the Rev. James Charles Blomfield M.A. of Exeter College, Oxford, and rural dean of Bicester. There is a hedge of elm and yew in the rectory garden, supposed to be 200 or 300 years old. Here is a Congregational chapel. Richard Wootten bequeathed in 1866-7 £56 yearly for pensions of £14. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners are lords of the manor. The principal landowners are F. S. Browne esq. W. Cole esq. the Rector, and the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The soil is clay; subsoil, clay. The chief crops are wheat, oats and barley. The area is 3,550 acres; rateable value, £4,378; the population in 1881 was 597.

LEAFIELD-CUM-WYCHWOOD is an ecclesiastical parish formed in 1860 from the civil parish of Shipton-under-Wychwood and ecclesiastical parish of Wychwood, in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Chipping Norton, and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. LEAFIELD is a township in the parish of Shipton-under-Wychwood, 4 miles north-west-by-north from Witney, 8 miles south from Chipping Norton and 2½ south-east from Ascott station. The church of St. Michael and all Angels, consecrated in 1860, is a well designed structure in the Early English style, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles and south porch and a central tower, with spire a clock and 6 bells, added in 1874: the north and south arches of the tower open to quasi-transepts, forming an organ chamber and vestry: the eastern and western arches of the tower are very elegant and are supported by clustered shafts, with rich foliated capitals: the east window of three lights, with a cinquefoiled wheel above, is richly stained and there is a good niche with credence table in the north wall of the chancel; each of the aisles is divided from the nave by an arcade of four arches: the tower is a square, with an octagonal upper storey from which rises a broach spire of the same shape. The register dates from the year 1860. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value about £135, with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford, and held since 1875 by the Rev. Thomas William Lee M.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge. Here is a Baptist chapel built in 1876. Sir G. Fettiplace's charity of £4 yearly is for bread, and there is a charity left by Sir Henry Unton, producing £18 yearly for church purposes. Near the church is an ancient cross, restored in 1873. Lord Churchill, who is lord of the manor, the Crown and P. S. Yapp esq. are the principal landowners. The soil is clay and part brash; subsoil, clay and gravel. The chief crops are wheat, beans, barley, oats and turnips. The area is 907 acres; rateable value £1,929; the population in 1881 was 712.

WYCHWOOD is situated between Burford and Charlbury, and is a parish formed out of the old forest of Wychwood and ecclesiastically annexed to Leafield. The West Midland railway passes within a mile north-west of the parish with a station at Ascott. Here is a Primitive Methodist Chapel. The Crown, who are lords of the manor, and Lord Churchill are the principal landed proprietors. The soil is stone brash, gravel and limestone; subsoil, rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. The area is 3,692 acres; rateable value £3,614: the population in 1881 was 213.

NORTH LEIGH is a village and parish 5 miles west-south-west from Woodstock, 4 north-east from Witney railway station and about 3½ from Handborough station on the Oxford, Worcester and Wolverhampton railway, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. St. Mary's church is an interesting stone edifice in the Norman, Early English and Decorated styles, consisting of chancel, nave, aisles, continued westward until flush with the west wall of the tower, two chapels, south porch, and an embattled western tower containing 6 bells, re-cast from 5 in 1876 and re-hung at a cost of £130, raised by subscription; the chancel, chiefly in the Decorated style, is separated from the nave by a stone screen of similar character; it retains a piscina and a monument on the south side to Robert Perrot, 1605, with two figures, male and female, kneeling before a prayer desk, and underneath it figures of his four sons and four daughters also kneeling; at the base of a sepulchral niche, in the north wall of the chancel, is a brass to Thomas Buckingham esq. 1431 and above the chancel arch, on the west side, is a mural painting of the Resurrection and the Last Judgment; the nave is divided from the aisles by arcades of two pointed arches on either side with round pillars, these are in both cases Transition Norman; on the north side of the north aisle is a chapel in the Italian style, built by James Perrot, who died in 1724, as is recorded on his monument in the chapel, where there are also monuments to the Musgrave family: at the east end of this aisle is a chantry chapel, a beautiful specimen of Late Perpendicular, with fan tracery vaulting and on the south side a piscina with Tudor flowers; an ogee arch opens from this chapel to the chancel and under it is a very fine Perpendicular altar tomb, supporting the recumbent effigies in alabaster of Sir William Wylcot, in armour, and his wife, both wearing a collar of SS.; over the tomb is a canopy with bold crockets, pinnacles and finial; in the south wall of the chapel is a curious monument to William Lenthall, dated 1628; this chapel, as appears from the patent rolls of Henry VI. was founded by Elizabeth, widow of Sir William Wylcot and afterwards wife of John Blackett knt. of Northleigh, in 1440-41; Sir William was sheriff of Oxfordshire in 1391-92; the tower, reputed to be in part Saxon, has very massive walls of rubble, with Norman openings of two lights in the belfry storey, divided by a baluster: there is an ancient Norman font, the whole fabric was completely restored and porch rebuilt in 1864, at a cost of upwards of £1,300, £200 of which was given by the parishioners and the rest raised by subscription. The register dates from the year 1573. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £240 with residence, in the gift of the Lord Chancellor and held since 1861 by the Rev. Robert White Fiske M.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge. The Wesleyans have a place of worship. There are charities, producing about £43 yearly, for distribution in bread, clothing and money; £16 yearly for apprenticing, £7 15s. for educational purposes and about £2 for general relief. Wilcote, the seat of Charles Sartoris esq. J.P. is an ancient mansion on the north-north-east of Wilcote parish, partly in this parish and partly in Finstock, pleasantly situated, commanding an extensive view over a fine vale of pasture land. The Duke of Marlborough is lord of the manor and owns the greater part of the land. The soil is gravel and clay; subsoil, principally limestone. The crops are the usual cereals and potatoes of a superior quality. The area is 2,252 acres; rateable value, £4,076; the population in 1881 was 648.

OSNEY HILL, or Horse-on-the-Hill, formerly extra-parochial, is now a parish. James Mason esq. is lord of the manor and sole landowner. The area is 208 acres; rateable value, £61; the population in 1881 was 8.

NEWYATT is a hamlet a little west of the village; partly in this parish and partly in that of Hailey. EAST END is a scattered hamlet of this parish, about one mile east; about the year 1814 a Roman villa was discovered here, with an interesting tesselated pavement.

Parish Clerk, Emanuel Jarvis.

SOUTH LEIGH is a small village and parish with station on the East Gloucestershire branch of the Great Western railway, 72½ miles from London, 2½ south-east from Witney and 8 west-north-west from Oxford, in the hundred of Wootton, Witney union and county court district, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. In the Domesday Survey Lege, or South Leigh, formed part of the grant of Roger D'Ivry. In the reign of Stephen, A.D. 1147 the chapel of South Leigh was granted by Richard de Camville to Reading Abbey and at the end of the sixteenth century it was made over, together with seven other livings, to the bishopric of Oxford, with a view to the re-endowment of the latter, Queen Elizabeth having kept the bishopric vacant for 41 years. The church of St. James', situated at the north end of the village, is a small building, mostly Perpendicular and consists of chancel with Lady chapel on the north, nave, north aisle, south porch and a western tower, with embattled parapet, containing 4 bells: the walls of the chancel are Norman, and opening into it on the south side is a priest's door of the same period, with a carved tympanum on the outside; the chancel also retains a piscina with aumbry, both Transition Norman, and opposite this, on the south side, is a Norman lancet with wide splay: the rood loft stairs remain; the chapel, nave, and aisle screen are Perpendicular and the nave is separated from the aisle by three Perpendicular arches; the east window is of a like character and is filled with stained glass representing The Preaching of the Baptist; the window of the chapel contains a head of St. James, formerly in the east window; from the pulpit of this church, an unpretending erection of oak, John Wesley preached his first sermon on October 16th, 1725; in 1872, the church underwent a thorough restoration, at cost of £834 2s. 5d. (not including £300 for chancel); besides which nearly £200 was given in presents to the church and an organ purchased by subscription at a further cost of £100; to all these works C. Sibthorp esq. of Canwick, Lincolnshire, was a liberal subscriber; during the restoration some singular fifteenth century mural paintings were discovered in the chancel and other parts of the church; these are five in number and represent respectively the Resurrection, The Weighing of Souls (a very fine painting on the south nave wall), The Gates of Heaven, The Blessed Virgin (in the chancel) and St. Clement of Rome; when discovered they were very complete in nearly every detail, though much faded and were faithfully restored at a cost of £80 by C. Sibthorp esq.; at the west end of the nave is a brass to William Secoll, a layman, 1557, and the porch contains the remains of a stoup; the font is Perpendicular and panelled with two steps. The register dates from 1612. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £320 with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford, and held since 1869 by the Rev. Gerard Moultrie M.A. of Exeter College, Oxford. The vicarage house, a large and imposing structure, with a tower, upwards of 60 feet high, is a good building of red brick with stone dressings, in a modified style of Romanesque, built by subscription in 1870, from designs by Mr. John Gibbs, architect, of Oxford, at a cost of £1,855. There is a Wesleyan chapel here, a commodious stone erection, built in 1876. There are charities of £34 a year for distribution in bread and clothing. The old manor house, near the church, has a good Perpendicular fire-place, and some oak panelling; on the green are three steps, formerly supporting a village cross. James Mason esq. who is lord of the manor, and Brasenose College, Oxford, are the largest landowners. The charities amount to about £22 yearly, derived from land. The soil is clay and gravel; subsoil, clay. The chief crops are the usual cereals, and there is much pasturage. The area is 2,074 acres; rateable value £3,165; the population in 1881 was 359.

Parish Clerk, James Feane.

LEWKNOR is a village and parish 1 mile south-west from Aston Rowant station (on the Watlington and Princes Risborough railway), 4 miles south-east from Tetsworth, 6 south-west from Thame, 10 south-west from Wycombe and 2½ north-east from Watlington, in the hundred of Lewknor, unions and county court districts of Thame and Wycombe, rural deanery of Aston, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Margaret is a fine building of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, nave, south aisle and a western embattled tower of Perpendicular date, containing 5 bells and a clock; the chancel is an excellent example of Decorated work and has an east window of five lights, a piscina and a sepulchral canopied recess; the chancel arch is Transition Norman and the nave partly of this character and partly Decorated, the rest of the church being of the latter period; there is a very early Norman font and the church contains a brass to John Aldeburne, priest, c. 1380, with half effigy, the inscription, a part of which remained when the church was restored in 1845, being now lost; there is also a fine effigy of stone, with one shield remaining, being a bend, with crosses pattée. The register dates from the year 1666. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £255 with residence and glebe let for £166, in the gift of All Souls College, Oxford, and held since 1866 by the Rev. George Fitzclarence Slade M.A. formerly fellow of that college. The charities for distribution in bread, clothing and money, amount to about £27 yearly. The principal landowners are All Souls College, Major Fane, the trustees of the late Rev. Sir Edwd. Repps Jodrell bart. who are lords of the manor, Phipps James Digby Wykeham esq. the Rev. H. T. Young, the Rev. G F. Slade and Mr. Robert Neighbour, with some smaller proprietors. The soil is fine loam; subsoil, chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans and oats. The area of the parish is 2,560 acres; rateable value, £3,129; the population of the whole in 1881 was 606.

LITTLEMORE is a liberty and ecclesiastical parish formed in 1847, partly taken from the parishes of St. Mary the Virgin, Oxford, and Iffley, in the union of Abingdon, county court district of Oxford and partly from Iffley parish, in the union of Headington, Bullingdon hundred, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford and rural deanery of Cuddesdon, 2½ miles south from Oxford, with a station on the Wycombe branch of the Great Western railway and 59 miles from London. The church of SS. Mary and Nicholas is a modern building of stone in the Early English style, erected in 1835 at a cost of over £800 and consists of chancel and nave and a western tower with low pyramidal roof containing a clock and 1 bell: all the windows are stained: the church will hold about 300 persons. The register dates from the year 1836. The living is a vicarage, yearly value £230 with residence and 6 acres of glebe, in the alternate gift of Oriel College, Oxford, and Charles Edward Crawley esq. and held since 1872 by the Rev. Vernon Thomas Green M.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge. Among former incumbents may be named H. E. John Henry, Cardinal Newman, who held this living in conjunction with the vicarage of St. Mary the Virgin, in Oxford, from 1828 to 1843, and in 1842 established here an ascetic community, over which he presided for three years. The Baptists have a place of worship here, built in 1804. Here is a private middle class school, conducted by Mr. W. R. R. Hurst, and also a labourers' club room. In the parish are the remains of Cherley Mynchery, or Nunnery, founded by Roger de Sandford in the time of Henry II. for Benedictine nuns and dedicated to SS. Mary and Nicholas; it was suppressed by Wolsey in 1524, when its revenues were estimated at £23 yearly; the existing buildings, still inhabited, are of Perpendicular date; the seal of the nunnery was found in 1762 by a neighbouring farmer. The Oxfordshire County Lunatic Asylum, situated here, is a large stone building. The principal landowners are the trustees of the late J. Morrell esq. and the Oxford Local Board and Lincoln and Corpus Christi colleges, Oxford. The soil is sandy loam; subsoil, yellow sand. The chief crops are barley and wheat. The area of the liberty is 846, and of the ecclesiastical parish 1,090 acres; rateable value, £1,927; the population in 1881 was 1,029, including the inmates of the Oxfordshire Asylum, numbering about 550.

MAPLE DURHAM is a secluded village and parish 4 miles north-west from Reading, in the hundred of Langtree, union of Bradfield, county court district of Reading, rural deanery of Henley, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford; it is pleasantly situated, being bounded on the south by the river Thames and sheltered by a ridge of hills on the north. The road from Caversham to Maple-Durham, shaded by a row of pines nearly the whole distance, forms a most picturesque and agreeable promenade: the nearest bridge up the river is at Whitchurch, about 2 miles; and down, at Caversham, 4 miles; there is a ferry across the river from the Roebuck inn, about a mile below the lock. The church of St. Margaret is a fabric of Late Perpendicular date, consisting of chancel, nave, south chapel and a western tower of brick, raised 24 feet in 1863 and containing 6 bells and a clock, presented by King William IV. and bearing the royal initials; the chapel of the Blount family, on the south side, is walled and railed off from the rest of the church, but its style, though late, is superior to that of the church proper; between the chapel and the nave is a monument with recumbent figures, to Sir Richard Blount and Elizabeth his wife, also surrounded by iron railings; a brass is recorded here to Sir Robert Bardole, 1385: the nave and south aisle were entirely restored in the year 1863, an organ chamber formed, the gallery removed and the tower chamber thrown into the church, three or four windows filled with stained glass and a stone porch and two new windows built; the interior, including the chancel and font, is brilliantly decorated in polychrome. The register dates from the year 1627. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £881 with 52½ acres of glebe, in the gift of Eton College and held since 1862 by the Rev. Edward Coleridge M.A. fellow of Eton and formerly fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. Lyster's hospital is for six aged men and women, each of whom receives 1s. 6d. weekly with wood for fuel; the Smallwood and Benwell's charity of 12s. a year is distributed in money. The river hereabouts affords excellent fishing for both pike and perch. Maple Durham House, the seat of John Darell Blount esq. is a fine old Elizabethan mansion on the bank of the Thames, approached through a stately avenue of ancient elms nearly a mile in length; the interior contains an interesting collection of pictures, among which is a portrait of Mrs. Martha Blount, the friend of Pope; during the civil war this house was fortified in support of the Royal cause by Sir Charles Blount, the governor of Reading, Sir Arthur Aston, superintending in person the work of fortification; being at length subjected to an assault, it was courageously defended, but eventually had to surrender. Attached to the mansion is a domestic (Catholic) chapel, dedicated to St. Michael, which the public are permitted to attend. The soil is chalk and gravel; subsoil, chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and peas. The area is 2,878 acres; rateable value, £4,865; the population in 1871 was 479.

MARSH BALDON, see BALDON.

MARSTON is a parish in the hundred of Bullingdon, union of Headington, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Islip, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 1¾ miles north-north-east from Oxford. The river Cherwell forms part of the boundary of this parish. The church of St. Nicholas is an ancient and plain building of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, south porch and a low embattled western tower containing 5 bells; the chancel is well proportioned and has an east window of three lights, with a spray of oak foliage carved in the apex of the dripstone; the recess of the first window on the south side is carried down and forms a sedile, and eastward of it is a small square piscina: on the same side is a blocked door, with a heavy carved label on the outside: the chancel arch is Transition Norman and near it a hagioscope opens into the south aisle: the nave has arcades of four arches on the north and three on the south side of the same style as the chancel arch, but not equally early: the clerestory windows are Late Perpendicular, as are the walls of both aisles and the north door; the tower also partakes of the same features: in the chancel is a brass to Unton Croke esq. serjeant at law, 1671, and Anne, his wife, daughter and heir of Richard Here esq. of Marston; Croke resided at the Manor house and took a prominent part on the side of the Parliament in the Civil War: the churchyard formerly contained a cross, taken down in 1830 to mend the church wall. The register dates from the year 1654. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £189, in the gift of the Rev. T. H. Whorwood D.D. and held since 1877 by the Rev. John Philip Smith M.A. of St. John's College, Cambridge. One hundred acres of land are let for the benefit of the proprietors of Marston and of the poor; a committee appointed assigns the portion to the poor, according to a scale that has been acted upon; it is termed "Forest money." The village cross, distinct from that formerly in the churchyard, was taken down about 1830 and the materials used for mending the roads. The old manor house, removed in 1843, was used as a place of meeting in May, 1646, by the Royal and Parliamentary Commissioners during the negotiations for the surrender of Oxford. To the Crokes, of Marston, belonged the eccentric wanderer, Charles Croke, who published in 1667 an account of his rambles, entitled "Youth's Inconstancy," under the pseudonym of Rodolphus. The trustees of the late William Peppercorn are lords of the manor. The principal landowners are Brasenose and Corpus Christi colleges and Mrs. John Rippington and Edwin Rippington esq. The soil is loam and clay; subsoil, clay and gravel. The chief crops are wheat and barley. The area is 1,212 acres; rateable value, £3,695; the population in 1881 was 515.

MERTON is a parish in the hundred of Bullingdon, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situated between Ambrosden and Charlton-on-Otmoor, bounded on the south by the river Ray, 3 miles south-west from Bicester and 10 north-east from Oxford. A branch of a Roman military road passes through the parish. The church of St. Swithin is an ancient structure, entirely in the Decorated style, and consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, south aisle with porch and a western tower with ornamental parapet; it had formerly a spire and vanes at the angles, with 5 bells, but the spire becoming dilapidated the first 4 bells were sold in 1796 to defray the expense of taking it down: the chancel contains sedilia and piscina and an arched sepulchral recess, with a locker on the north side under an enriched arch, above which is a mural monument of alabaster, with effigies of a man in armour, his wife and four daughters kneeling beneath a canopy, and inscribed to John Doyley, of Merton esq. 1593, and Anne (Barnard) his wife; another mural monument commemorates Elizabeth (Poole), wife of John Huband, 1621, with shields of arms; on the south wall are tablets to Richard Harington esq. 1712, and Margaret (Jane) his wife and four children, and there are various inscribed floor stones to this family, 1660-1713: the nave is separated from the aisle by an arcade of four Decorated arches; there was formerly a north aisle, three of the arches of which are built into the existing north wall: the font is plain and round, the pulpit is Jacobean: it was restored in 1873, at a cost of £1,200, one-fourth of which was given by Exeter College, the remainder having been collected by a former vicar, the Rev. W. M. Wollaston: in the churchyard is the octagonal shaft of a cross on a low base. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1636; marriages, 1739; burials, 1635. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £165 with residence, in the gift of Exeter College, Oxford, and held since 1880 by the Rev. Edwyn Reynolds Massey M.A. of that college. Near the church stands an ancient manor house, erected by the Doyleys (who obtained a grant of the manor in 1553, in the time of Queen Elizabeth) and now occupied as a farmhouse. A causeway, nearly two miles in length, constructed at a great expense many years since by Sir George Page Turner bart. joins the village to that of Ambrosden: some antiquaries regard this place as the scene of the battle of Mertune between Ethelred and the Danes, A.D. 871, a view which the existence of entrenchments in Merton wood and relics found near the spot seem to justify. Mrs. Page-Fryer is lady of the manor and principal landowner. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats & beans; and the soil is clay and stone brash; subsoil, clay. The area is 1,990 acres; rateable value, £1,942; the population in 1881 was 169.

MIDDLETON STONEY is a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 3 miles north-west from Bicester and 12 north-east from Oxford. The church of All Saints, which stands in Middleton Park, is an ancient structure of the latter part of the twelfth century, supposed to have been erected by one of the Norman lords of this place: it consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles and an embattled western tower containing 5 bells: a memorial chapel was added on the north side of the chancel by the late Dowager Countess of Jersey, to the memory of the fifth earl: the chancel is chiefly Decorated, with a Transition Norman arch; the north arcade of the nave consists of three pointed arches on round pillars of the same period, and on the south side are two arches of Decorated work; the tower is Early English, with arcading round the upper storey; the south doorway is a rich example of Late Norman, with singular foliage in the head: there are monuments in the church to Elizabeth wife of John Harman, 1607; Ann, Countess of Jersey, 1762; Nicholas Harman esq. 1688, and Judith his wife, 1649. The register dates from the year 1598. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £530, with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1874 by the Rev. William Henry Draper M.A. of Worcester College, Oxford. The late Dowager Countess of Jersey left in 1866 £4,500 £3 per Cent Consols to provide clothing and board for girls selected from the schools of this parish and those of Chesterton and Somerton; they are trained as domestic servants and afterwards placed out in service; there is also an almshouse charity of £45 per annum, bequeathed by the same lady. The village is remarkably pretty; most of the cottages were repaired and ornamented at the cost of the late Dowager Countess of Jersey. Within a few yards of the east end of the church once stood an ancient castle, supposed to have been built by Richard de Camville, in the reign of King Stephen, and though no portion of the structure now remains, its foundations may be perceived and its formation distinctly traced. Middleton Park, the seat of the Earl of Jersey, is an extensive but somewhat plain structure of brick, erected on the site of a building destroyed by fire in 1753, and has been added to at different periods; it consists of a central block with a portico supported by Ionic pillars and two projecting wings; the whole forms three sides of a quadrangle and stands in a beautifully-wooded park of 600 acres. The Earl of Jersey is sole proprietor and lord of the manor. The soil is chiefly stone brash; subsoil, white marl. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The area is 1,834 acres; rateable value, £2,395; the population in 1881 was 293.

MILCOMBE, formerly a hamlet of Bloxham, was separated in 1854 and is now an ecclesiastical parish, distant from Banbury about 5 miles south-west, in the hundred of Bloxham, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Lawrence is a small structure principally of the thirteenth century and consists of chancel, nave, separated from the aisle by an Early English arcade, north aisle and a tower with pinnacles containing 4 bells; it was restored by the Rev. Philip Hookins B.A. a former incumbent: the chancel is divided from the nave by a rood-screen of very good Perpendicular work, which has been restored according to the ancient design, and the nave retains many open oak benches of the same date: the nave arcades are plain Early English, but the north aisle is modern: the stained east window is a memorial to Elizabeth C. Holloway; one on the south side of the chancel has been inserted to Richard Blagden, father of the late incumbent, and there are five others: the font is Perpendicular. The earlier register are included with those of Bloxham, which date from 1630. The present register of Milcombe dates only from 1813. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £160 with residence, and held since 1875 by the Rev. Frederick William Mercer M.A. of Wadham College, Oxford. Eton College will in future present three times and the rector of Wigginton once in four vacancies. The Baptists have a place of worship here. The town lands of 12A. 2R. 14P. with eight cottages produce £22 10S. which is equally divided for church purposes, public uses and the purchase of fuel for the poor: there is also a fuel allotment of 16 acres, yielding about £29 per annum. The manorial rights belong to Christ Church, Oxford. The principal landowners are New College, Christ Church, Oxford and Eton College. The soil is various, princially red loam; the crops are general. The population in 1881 was 221; the area is 1,221 acres; rateable value, £2,048.

MILTON-UNDER-WYCHWOOD (township), with the ville of Bruern and township of Lyneham form an ecclesiastical parish in the hundred of Chadlington, union of Chipping Norton, county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. Milton is 1¼ miles west from Shipton railway station and about 7 south-west from Chipping Norton. The church of SS. Simon and Jude, erected in 1854 by the late James Haughton Langston esq. M.P. assisted by the Ven Archdeacon Huxtable, is a handsome edifice in the Decorated or Geometrical style, and was one of the earliest works of the late G. E. Street esq. R.A.; it consists of chancel, with organ chamber and vestry on the north side and a south aisle, separated from the chancel by an arcade of two arches and has an east window of 5 lights, with rich geometrical tracery, nave, with a clerestory divided from its aisles by arcades of four arches on the north and three on the south side and an octagonal bell turret, containing 4 bells and surmounted by a small spire: a low stone parclose separates the nave from the chancel: the west-end of the south aisle forms the porch and at the south-west corner of the churchyard is a good lych-gate; the Rev. Alfred Wranius Newport Deacon T.A.K.C.L. is curate in sole charge. Here is a Baptist chapel, built in 1837; also Primitive Methodist and Wesleyan chapels. The Earl of Ducie is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, gravel and rock. There are extensive quarries here of excellent stone, of which St. Paul's Cathedral, London, is partly built, besides many of the buildings in Oxford and the neighbouring churches. Sir G. Fettiplace's charity of £4 is for bread. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. The area of Milton township is 2,080 acres; rateable value, £3,599. The population in 1881 was 836; the population of the ecclesiastical parish in 1881 was 1,093.

GREAT MILTON is a township and parish 8 miles south-east from Oxford, 6 west-south-west from Thame and 2 miles south-west from Tiddington station on the Great Western railway, in the hundred, union and county court district of Thame, rural deanery of Cuddesdon, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Mary is a building in the Decorated style, consisting of chancel, nave, clerestoried aisles, south porch and a western tower of Perpendicular date, containing 8 bells: this church is a valuable example, in the completeness of its plan, of the ecclesiastical style of the fourteenth century: the chancel retains sedilia and piscina and some ancient stained glass; the chancel arch is Early English, and is spanned by a post-Reformation rood screen, the north aisle has some glass, referring, probably, to the story of Lazarus; the south aisle exhibits in its windows good examples of flowing tracery, and both aisles seem to have had altars, the latter also a piscina; the font is circular and plain: in the church is a fine coffin slab of Purbeck marble, with a richly floriated cross, rising above the figure of the Holy Lamb: there is a brass, with two effigies only, to four children of Robert Eggerley and Kateryn his wife: at the east end of the south aisle is a superb but cumbrous marble monument with three alabaster effigies, under a canopy supported by Corinthian columns, to Sir Michael Dormer, erected by him in 1618, his wife Dorothea and his father, Ambrose Dormer esq. 1566, and there is also a monument to Mrs. Wilkinson, 1654, wife of Dr. Henry Wilkinson, Principal of Magdalen Hall, Oxford: the north doorway is an excellent specimen of Early English, while the south porch is groined, with a parvise above and a stair turret with niche; round the exterior are remains of several other niches: the church was thoroughly restored in the year 1851, under the supervision of the late Sir G. G. Scott R.A. The register commences in the year 1550. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £300 with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1877 by the Rev. William James Richardson M.A. of Corpus Christi college, Cambridge, and, till about 1852, was a peculiar of the Bishop of Lincoln and furnished two prebends to Lincoln Cathedral one called Milton Ecclesia and the other Milton Manor'

There is a Wesleyan chapel. Kent's charity of £64 is now wholly given to the poor in fuel and clothing. Here was formerly a Benedictine priory, a cell to the abbey of Abingdon. John Milton, the poet, is said to have been descended from a family who had possessions here and took their name from this place; a house, reputed to have been held by them and situated opposite the village well, is not older than 1600. Lord Overstone, M. P. W. Boulton esq. who is lord of the manor, and C. R. Couling esq. are the principal landowners. The soil is sand; subsoil, rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley and beans. The area of the whole parish is 4,402 acres; rateable value, £8,436; the population of the parish in 1871 was 1,149; Great Milton township, 618. The hamlets of LITTLE MILTON and ASCOTT, in 1844, were formed into an ecclesiastical parish and are given under a separate heading.

CHILWORTH is a hamlet, 1 mile north, with a population in 1871 of 94.

LITTLE MILTON is a village and, with the hamlet of ASCOTT, forms an ecclesiastical parish taken out of Great Milton in 1844, in the hundred of Bullingdon, union and county court district of Thame, rural deanery of Cuddesdon, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, about a mile south from Great Milton, 7 miles south-west from Thame and 3½ south-west from Tiddington station, on the Great Western railway. The church of St. James, erected in 1844, is a building in the Early Decorated style, from designs by Mr. Hayward, of Exeter, and consists of chancel, nave and a tower with clock. The register dates from the year 1844. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value from Ecclesiastical Commissioners £245, in the gift of the Bishop and held since 1874 by the Rev. James Pooley B.A. of Christ's College, Cambridge. Catherine Grayson's charity of £10 16s. yearly, bequeathed in 1858, is for fuel and clothing, to be distributed amongst twelve poor people; Griffith's of 15s. is distributed in money. Matthew Piers Watts Boulton esq. who is lord of the manor, and C. R. Couling esq. are the principal landowners. The soil is partly sandy, partly gravel; subsoil, rock. The chief crops are wheat and all kinds of corn; rateable value, £2,638; the area, with the hamlet, is 1,887 acres; the population in 1881 was 364.

MINSTER LOVELL is a parish 2¾ miles west-north-west from Witney, in the hundred of Chadlington, Witney union and county court district, rural deanery of Witney, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, pleasantly situated on either side of a valley through which runs the river Windrush, dividing the parish into what are termed Great and Little Minster. The church of St. Kenelm, seated on the south-west declivity of a hill, is a noble cruciform building of stone in the Late Perpendicular style, consisting of chancel, with organ chamber and vestry on the north side, nave, transepts, north porch and a central tower with groined roof and embattled parapet, containing 3 bells; a piscina remains on the south side of the chancel and there are three hagioscopes, one in each transept and one opening from the vestry: the reredos, erected in 1876 in memory of Lady Taunton, is of Caen stone in five compartments, each being beautifully sculptured: the pulpit and font, both of Painswick stone, are good Perpendicular: in the south transept is a fine altar tomb to Francis, 1st Viscount Lovell, an adherent of Richard III. for whom he fought at Bosworth Field, August 22nd, 1485; he afterwards became a partizan of the impostor Lambert Simnel, and, after the encounter at Stoke, June 16, 1487, mysteriously disappeared; the tomb bears a full-length effigy in armour, with clasped hands and is adorned with other figures and shields of arms, but has no date or inscription: inserted in the west wall of this transept is a slab, formerly encircled with military trophies sculptured in stone, to Henry Heylyn, 1695, and his father and mother Edward and Elizabeth Heylin, with an inscription in Latin and a shield of arms; in the chancel are also memorials to Henry Powell, vicar, 1791, and Anna, daughter of Dr. Clay, with arms, 1616, and in the south transept a monument to the family of Wheeler, 1661, and there are also three brasses of scrolls, one of which is mutilated. In 1868 the church was thoroughly renovated and restored and re-pewed, at a cost of £1,247, raised by subscription. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1762; marriages, 1754. The living is a vicarage, gross income, from tithe rent charge, £119 and residence, with 45 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College, and held since 1873 by the Rev. Horace Charles Ripley M.A. of University College, Durham. There are Primitive Methodist and Wesleyan chapels. An alien priory of Benedictine monks, a cell to the abbey of St. Mary de Ibreio, or Ivry, in Normandy, was founded here in the reign of King John before 1206, by Maud Lovel, and dedicated to St. Kenelm; and at the suppression granted to Eton College: of the Conventual buildings, the Perpendicular church, now the parish church, and some other portions, with the bridge, remain. Here are the ruins of an ancient mansion, formerly the residence of the Lovell family and situated to the south-east of the church, near the river Windrush; the buildings, when perfect, formed a square, the south side being parallel to the river and within a few feet of its bank; the whole of the south and east sides are now destroyed and the only portions standing are the north side, part of a tower at the south end of the western side and a low wall attached to it, with several fine, but now roofless and dismantled apartments; this spot is the scene of Clara Reeve's familiar tale "The Old English Baron," published in 1777. The principal landowners are John Dean esq. (lord of the manor), Robert Abraham esq. of Ringwood Oak House and John Dutton esq. The soil is various; subsoil, clay and stone brash. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips, and on the allotments potatoes. The area is 1,938 acres; rateable value, £2,706; the population in 1881 was 511.

CHARTERVILLE is an allotment estate consisting of 80 small farms of 2, 3 and 4 acres, with a one-floor cottage to each farm: they were laid out in 1847 as part of Feargus O'Connor's land scheme.

MIXBURY with the Hamlet of FULWELL and Township of WOOLASTON is a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Brackley, rural deanery of Bicester, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. Mixbury is 3 miles south-east from Brackley, 6 west from Buckingham and 8 north-east from Bicester, and the village, situated south of the river Ouse, which separates it from Northamptonshire, consists of a few cottages and farm house. The church of All Saints is an ancient stone structure of the Decorated period, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave and north aisle and a battlemented western tower containing 3 bells: the nave and aisle are separated by an arcade of three arches on octagonal pillars; the font is of the same shape and plain: there is a good Norman south doorway, with curious Runic crosses on the imposts: the church has been restored at a great expense, borne chiefly by the late rector, the Rev. William Jocelyn Palmer B.D. The register dates from the year 1645. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £210 with residence and 60 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1881 by the Ven. James Leslie Randall M.A. late Fellow of New College, Oxford, hon. canon of Christ Church, archdeacon of Bucks, and surrogate. Edward Slater Harrison esq. is the principal landowner, but the manor with much of the land is the subject of an action in Chancery. £5 worth of bread is given away on New Year's day. The soil is limey; subsoil, stone. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The area is 2,630 acres; rateable value, £2,001 18s. 4d; the population, including Fullwell and Woolaston, in 1871 was 338.

MONGEWELL is a small village and parish 14 miles south-east from Oxford, 12 north-west from Reading, 11 north-west from Henley, 1¼ south-by-east from Wallingford, in the hundred of Langtree, union and county court district of Wallingford, rural deanery of Henley, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, delightfully situated on the banks of the Thames. The nearest bridge up the river is at Wallingford, three-quarters-of-a-mile, and down, at Streatley, 5 miles. The church of St. John the Baptist is a plain building in a modern style of Gothic, consisting of chancel and nave, and was restored in 1880 at the cost of £700; it contains a monument, with recumbent marble figure, erected by Ann Saunders, to the memory of her son; there is a plain tablet to the wife of the Hon. Shute Barrington D.D. Bishop of Durham 1791-1826. The register dates from the year 1682. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £382 with residence and 6 acres of glebe, let for £12, in the gift of trustees and held since 1879 by the Rev. Constantine Griffith Wodehouse, of Exeter College, Oxford. From the neighbourhood of Mongewell the Roman vallum known as "Grim's Dyke," runs in a south-easterly direction towards Nuffield. Mongewell House is a large square mansion situated on the banks of the Thames and surrounded by a well-timbered lawn, with park-like scenery and is occupied by John Matheson Fraser esq.; it was formerly a country seat of Shute Barrington, bishop of Durham. The soil is chalk and sand; subsoil, sandy. The chief crops are wheat, oats and barley. The area is 1,638 acres; rateable value, £1,850; the population in 1871 was 148.

NETTLEBED is a parish and village and a polling place for the county, pleasantly situated on an eminence 5 miles north-west from Henley and 6 south-east from Wallingford, on the high road from London to Oxford, in the hundred of Ewelme, union and county court district of Henley, rural deanery of Henley, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Bartholomew consists of chancel, nave, south aisle and a square brick tower, with stone dressings, containing 6 bells; it was rebuilt in 1844, in the Decorated style, under the direction of Mr. Hakewell and in 1872 the chancel was enlarged and decorated and an organ chamber built. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1653; marriages, 1726. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £106 with residence, in the gift of the vicar and held since 1882 by the Rev. Henry Algernon Baumgartner M.A. of Caius College, Cambridge. There is a Congregational chapel here. J. Champion's charity of £4 6s. 2d yearly, bequeathed in 1856, provides £2 16s. for distribution and £1 10s. for the Sunday school. A fair is held here on the Monday before the 29th of October. There are two brick, tile and lime kilns, with potteries for coarse ware, especially draining pipes, which are made from a thick bed of greenish-white sandy clay. There is also a saw-mill for cutting brush boards and a considerable trade is carried on in beech timber, with which this part of the county abounds. There are several good shops and inns. From the Windmill Hill, near the village, 696 feet in height, beautiful and extensive views are obtained of the surrounding country: this hill is said to be visible from the Devil's Dyke, near Brighton. The principal landowner is Lord Camoys, who is lord of the manor. The soil is loamy; subsoil, clay and gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The area is 1,164 acres; rateable value, £2,177: the population in 1881 was 658.

NEWINGTON is a parish comprising the liberties of BERWICK PRIOR and NEWINGTON and the tithings of BROOKHAMPTON and HOLCOMBE, in the hundred of Ewelme, Wallingford union and county court district, rural deanery of Cuddesdon, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. Newington is 6 miles north from Wallingford, 9 south-east from Oxford and 15 from Henley, on the eastern bank of the river Thames. The church of St. Giles is an ancient structure, chiefly of the Decorated period, consisting of chancel, and nave, north transept, south porch and a western tower, with plain parapet, surmounted by an octagonal spire and containing 4 bells, of which the first is inscribed "Sancta Maria, ora pro nobis," the other three are respectively dated 1592, 1608 and 1719: the chancel has in the south wall an arched recess, perhaps the tomb of the restorer of the church in the fourteenth century and a plain piscina with shelf: on the north side is a priests' door: the east window, of three lights, has flowing tracery in the head: the chancel arch is apparently of the fourteenth century and there are some remains of a good Early Perpendicular rood screen, repaired in the last century: the south door is Norman, the ancient arch mouldings, with their extremities resting on re-carved caps, now serving as a hood mould: another Norman door on the south side is now blocked: the font, which is unusually large, is round and plain and apparently of the thirteenth century: there are some lingering fragments of ancient glass, one window in the chancel being nearly full of these, consisting of figures of our Lord attended by angels; one of an ecclesiastic, kneeling and a representation of the Assumption of the Virgin; but the subjects are much confused: against the north chancel wall is an alabaster monument, with shrouded figures of Walter Dunch and Mary his wife, 1650; below are the arms of Dunch impaling Hungerford, and above a wooden tablet with arms and other devices: against the east wall is a memorial to Henry Dunch esq. 1686: in the chapel or transept is a brass, with effigies, to Alice, wife of William Skyrmote, and Maria Skyrmote, wife of John Skyrmote, his son, 1463: the lower stage of the tower is Early English, but the upper part and spire Decorated; on the east gable is a sun-dial, placed in 1743; the exterior was repaired with rough cast in 1776. The register dates from the year 1572. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value, from tithe rent charge, £331 with residence and 200 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1845 by the Rev. Septimus Cotes M.A. of Wadham College, Oxford. Newington House is the seat of Major Sir George Floyd Duckett bart. D.L., J.P. John Thomson esq. Mr. W. T. Franklin and Mr. John Deane are the chief owners of the land in Newington, which is all freehold. The soil is principally on the green sand and gault formation—a strong blue clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and beans. The entire area of the parish is 3,080 acres; rateable value, £2,901; the population of the whole parish in 1881 was 363.

BRITWELL PRIOR is now attached to Britwell Salome.

SOUTH NEWINGTON is a village and parish situated on the river Swere, 6 miles south-west from Banbury, about 20 north-west from Oxford and 7 north-east from Chipping Norton, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Peter is a handsome structure in the Norman, Early English and later styles and consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, south porch of Perpendicular date, ornamented with carved figures and surmounted by battlements and pinnacles and a western tower containing 5 bells: the chancel is Decorated and retains its piscina; the nave arcades are Transition Norman and Early English; there is a cylindrical Norman font, with zigzag mouldings and in the south aisle another piscina of Decorated work; the chancel and nave roofs were removed in 1825 and the lead sold to purchase slates: the aisle roofs are of the fifteenth century: in the churchyard is a fragment of a cross of Early English character. The register dates from the year 1538. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £200 with residence, in the gift of Exeter College, Oxford, and held since 1870 by the Rev. Thomas Whitehead M.A. of that college. The Primitive Methodists have a small chapel. Albert Brassey esq. is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are Exeter, Magdalen and New Colleges, Oxford. The soil is red loam and clay; subsoil, red rock and clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley and roots. The area is 1,460 acres; rateable value, £2,618; the population in 1881 was 324.

NEWNHAM MURREN is a village and parish within the parliamentary borough of Wallingford, beautifully situated on the banks of the Thames, one mile from Wallingford and fourteen miles south-east from Oxford, in the hundred of Langtree, union and county court district of Wallingford, rural deanery of Henley and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Mary is a small and plain structure of the Norman period, consisting of chancel, nave, south aisle, porch and gable bell-cot containing 2 bells: the chancel retains the original north and south windows and has also a Norman chancel arch; it retains a trefoil-headed piscina and a double locker and on the south side is a small circular Norman hagioscope; the nave is also of the same date, with an original doorway on the north side, but the south aisle is Decorated; there is a Norman font and a pulpit of Jacobean character; the church was completely restored in 1849. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1678; marriages 1696. The living is a rectory united to the vicarages of North Stoke and Ipsden, North Stoke being the mother church; the joint net yearly value is £568, in the gift of St. John's College, Cambridge and held since 1872 by the Rev. Charles Stanwell M.A. formerly fellow of that college, who resides at Ipsden Vicarage. Emery's charity of £8 5s. yearly is for clothing. The church land produces 10s. a year. Charles Hedges esq. is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil varies; subsoil, gravel. The crops are wheat and barley. The area is 1,840 acres; rateable value, £2,625; the population in 1881 was 248.

NEWTON PURCELL is a parish on the borders of Bucks, in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 6 miles north-east from Bicester and 4½ south-west from Buckingham. The church of St. Michael is an ancient structure originally in the Early Norman style, and consists of nave only with a turret containing 2 bells and clock: the north doorway, a fine example of Norman work, remains; the church has been thoroughly restored and re-pewed at the expense of the patron and rector. The register dates from the year 1681. The living is a rectory with Shelswell annexed, joint gross yearly value £352 with residence & 27 acres of glebe, in the gift of Edward Slater-Harrison esq. and held since 1843 by the Rev. John Meade B.A. of St. Peter's College, Cambridge. Edward Slater-Harrison esq. is lord of the manor and sole landowner. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, clay. The chief crops are wheat, beans, oats, &c. The area is 593 acres; rateable value, £741; and the population in 1881 was 89.

NOKE, in ancient writers "Oke" or "Ake," is a secluded village and parish one mile and a half south-east from Islip station on the London and North Western Railway, 5 miles north-east from Oxford and 9 south-west from Bicester, in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Islip, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, bounded in part on the north by the river Ray. The church of St. Giles is an ancient structure originally in the Early English style and consists of chancel, nave, south porch and a small square bell-cote on the western gable containing 2 bells: in the nave is a north door, now blocked, and on the north side of the chancel arch a Perpendicular niche: the nave roof is well constructed and apparently early: the font is Early English, of a cylindrical form and resting on a circular base: the pulpit is Jacobean, covered in the Italian style and there are some good old open benches; an hour-glass stand of iron remains in the splay of the north-east window: there was formerly a chapel on the north side of the chancel, erected by Joan, wife of Henry Bradshaw, for herself and her descendants of the Winchcombe family, her grandson, Benedict Winchcombe being then lord of the manor; he died in 1623 and was buried in the chapel, beneath an altar tomb of black marble, with his recumbent effigy; the foundress was buried in the same place in 1598 and commemorated by a tablet of marble with brasses and arms against the east wall; the estate becoming alienated, the chapel was neglected and falling into decay was eventually removed: in the chancel still remains the mutilated effigy of Benedict Winchcombe, and a brass to Johanna (Hurste) 1598, successively wife of William Mainwaring, gent. of Eartham, Essex, 1529 and Henry Bradshawe esq. Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer 1553; in the churchyard are memorials to the family of Harpur, 1617-67 and to the families of Lipscombe, Tipping and Steele. The register dates from the year 1554. The living is a rectory, net yearly value about £100 with residence, in the gift of the Duke of Marlborough and held since 1878 by the Rev. John Thorp of St. Bees. By deed of trust, dated Feb. 8, 1560, Joan Bradshaw gave to certain trustees rents amounting to £3 6s. 8d. yearly arising from property at Aston Clinton, Bucks, of which sum £3 is given to ten poor persons not receiving collections and 6s. 8d. to the trustees. This sum is now paid by the Mercers' Company, in which the estates are vested. John King, a native of this place and a farm labourer, is recorded to have attained, in 1764, the age of 128 years, being then perfectly able to walk daily from his house to Oxford market; he died in 1766. The Duke of Marlborough, who is lord of the manor, and the trustees of the Malthus charities of Blewbury, Berks, are the principal landowners. The soil is clay; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The area is 794 acres; rateable value, £1,139; the population in 1881 was 118.

NORTHMOOR is a parish in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 5 miles south-west from Eynsham railway station, 6½ west from Oxford, 7 south-east from Witney and 9 north-west from Abingdon, and is separated from Berkshire by the Isis, which is crossed at Newbridge, 1½ miles south-west by a stone bridge; and at Bablocke-Hythe, 1½ miles north-east by a ferry. The church of St. Denis is a structure of mixed styles, consisting of spacious chancel, north chapel, nave and a western embattled tower of Decorated date, curiously constructed upon piers from the interior of the original church, and containing 6 bells: the chancel is Early English, with an east window of singular design, now filled with stained glass as a memorial to Sarah Nalder; it retains a piscina and three good sedilia of the same period: in the north chapel, a Decorated work, are a piscina and two sepulchral recesses, near which are recumbent effigies of a cross-legged knight and a lady: there is a stained memorial window of two lights in the nave to the memory of the late vicar. The register dates from the year 1654. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £160 with 42 acres of glebe and cottages let for £95, in the gift of St. John's College, Oxford and held since 1881 by the Rev. Lewis Stacey Tuckwell M.A. of Magdalen College, Oxford, who is vicar of and resides at Standlake. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. There are charities for distribution of about £21 yearly and for church purposes of about £37. Edward William Harcourt esq. M.P. who is lord of the manor and St. John's College, Christ Church and Magdalen College, Oxford, are the principal landowners. The soil is limestone and gravel; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans, turnips &c. The area is 2,037 acres; rateable value, £2,830; the population in 1881 was 299.

NUFFIELD is a parish and village 7 miles north-west from Henley and 4 south-east from Wallingford, in the hundred of Ewelme, union of Henley, county court district of Wallingford, rural deanery of Henley, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of the Holy Trinity is a small but ancient structure of the Decorated period, consisting of chancel, nave, north aisle and a tower at the west end of the aisle, containing 2 bells: the church, previous to 1850, was carefully restored by Mr. B. Ferrey, architect, and the chancel is modern, but the nave and aisles are part of the original fabric, and are separated by an arcade with round pillars, having moulded caps and brasses: the font is a plain stone cylinder of the thirteenth century and bears the following inscription, in Lombardic characters, round the upper part, the plinth being built into a pillar:—

"FONTE SACRO LOTUM VEL MUNDAT GRACIA TOTUM VEL NON EST SACRAMENTI MUNDACIO PLENA."

here is a small brass, with half-effigy of a priest and an inscription in Norman French to Beneit Engliss' c. 1360. The register dates from the year 1570. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £415 with residence and 58½ acres of glebe, let for £80, in the gift of Sir James Hay Langham bart. of Cottesbrook Park, Northamptonshire, and held since 1873 by the Rev. John Holford Risley M.A. late fellow of New College, Oxford. Sir James Hay Langham bart. who is lord of the manor, Magdalen College, Oxford, and John Cook esq. are the chief landowners. The soil is light stock land, cultivated on the four-course or Norfolk system; subsoil, chalk. The area is 2,076 acres; rateable value, £1,834; the population in 1881 was 196.

NUNEHAM COURTENAY is a parish 2½ miles north from Culham station on the Great Western railway, in the hundred of Bullingdon, union and county court district of Abingdon, rural deanery of Cuddesdon, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, bounded on the west by the Isis, which separates it from Berkshire; the distance from Oxford by road or rail is 6 miles and by the river 8. The church of All Saints, picturesquely situated on a slight eminence near the Isis, was built in the year 1764, on the removal of the ancient church by Simon, second Earl Harcourt, from a design furnished by himself, slightly altered by Stuart: it is a plain, oblong building with a low dome in the centre and a very small apse at the east end: the west end has a portico of six Ionic columns, supporting a pediment and small segmental windows; on the north and south sides are semi-circular porches: it is now closed, a new church having been built by the patron, E. W. Harcourt esq. close to the village: this was consecrated May 18th, 1880, and is regularly used for divine service: some portions of the ancient church, an Early English edifice, are still standing in the adjoining park at Baldon; these consist of the lower part of a good Early English window, with the shafts and caps, a lancet window and a mutilated but splendid tomb to Sir Anthony Pollard, 1577, and his wife Philippa, 1606, with effigies of the knight, his lady and two children: an account of the arms and monuments in the old church, taken in 1660, is given in Harl. MS. 4170. The register dates from the year 1715. The living is a rectory, yearly value from the rent charge £452 11s. with 52 acres of glebe and residence, in the gift of Edward William Harcourt esq. M.P. and held since 1879 by the Rev. Sidney Phillips M.A. Brasenose College, Oxford. Archbishop Harcourt and Lady Harcourt's charities of £29 19s. 8d. yearly are for clothing and fuel. The village acquired its name from Robert de Courtnay, who married in 1214 Mary, youngest daughter of William de Redvers, Earl of Devon, by which family the manor had previously been held; to these succeeded Sir John Pollard, of Devon, and other owners; and in 1710 the estate was purchased from David, Earl of Wemys, for £17,000, by Simon, first Earl Harcourt and Lord Chancellor of England, who removed the village from its original position near the house to its present site on the London road. Edward William Harcourt esq. M.P., D.L., J.P. who is lord of the manor and sole landowner, is the present representative of the Harcourt family; his seat here, called Nuneham Park, includes an extensive but plain mansion of stone, erected from the designs of Mr. Leadbetter, beautifully situated on the left bank of the Isis, in an undulating and finely timbered park of 1,200 acres, well stocked with deer, which extends a considerable distance along the river and affords extensive and beautiful views on every side: a particularly fine view of Oxford is obtained from Whitehead's Oak, near which, upon a knoll above the river, stands the Conduit, originally erected in the centre of Carfax, Oxford, by Otho Nicholson esq. student of Christ Church, in 1610; it was taken down in 1787 and presented by the city to Earl Harcourt, who had it placed here: the house consists of a central block, with wings united to it by covered corridors, and contains many valuable paintings by the old masters, besides a very interesting collection of family portraits by Velasquez, Opie, Jackson, Reynolds and others; the library contains a series of important autograph letters and family MSS. including many letters by George III. from his boyhood until the time when his mental faculties became impaired; here also are portraits of Horace Walpole, Prior, Mason and Pope, presented by themselves, and a very fine portrait of Milton as a youth, by Van der Zucht; the curiosities and relics, of which there is a very large and singularly interesting collection, comprise a service of Sèvres, made for use at a fête on the occasion of the king's recovery in 1789; Rousseau's Tasso and pocket-book, with numerous papers and memoranda, given to Earl Harcourt by his widow; a quarry of glass from the tower at Stanton Harcourt, on which Pope, when staying there, had scratched the words, "Finished here the Fifth Book of Homer:" Queen Charlotte's snuff box; some tapestry, worked by Mary Queen of Scots and many other unique articles: the gardens, laid out by "Capability" Brown and Mason the poet, are very fine and combine at once the formal and the picturesque; to the left of the house the walks run for some distance along the river bank, winding amidst pleasant thickets; on the opposite side a sterner style prevails, with high clipped hedges, grottoes, statues and poetical inscriptions by Mason and William Whitehead, poet Laureate, or by earlier authors: the public are admitted to the park on Tuesdays and Thursdays only, from the 1st of May to the 1st of September, and private parties to the gardens on Tuesdays only, from 2 to 5; tickets are obtainable on application to Mr. F. Mair, Nuneham. The woods on the left bank descend almost uninterruptedly to the water's edge, but at one point, where an island with tall willows parts the stream, there is a broad greensward, with cottages, erected by Earl Harcourt, for the convenience of visitors, a rustic oaken bridge crosses to the island and beyond is a single arched bridge of stone. The soil is lower green sand with patches of gault and Kimmeridge clay; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The area is 2,079 acres; rateable value, £2,764; the population in 1881 was 261.

ODDINGTON is a parish 2 miles east from Islip railway station on the London and North Western railway, 6½ miles south-west from Bicester and 8 north-east from Oxford, in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Islip, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situated on the river Ray. The church of St. Andrew is a small but ancient structure chiefly of the Decorated period and consists of chancel (rebuilt in 1821), nave, south porch and a western tower, with plain parapet and pyramidal roof, containing 4 bells; the chancel retains an elegant piscina and a curious brass, with worm-eaten skeleton effigy in shroud, to the memory of Ralph Hamsterley, a former fellow of New College and some time rector here; on the north side of the nave is a blocked arch, which appears to have opened into a chapel, now destroyed: the font is plain and round: there is a chancel screen of three arches and a memorial to James Robins, minister, ob. 1659, appointed to the living by the Parliament, on the expulsion of Thomas Browne, a royalist; Henry Brooker, rector, ob. 1679; Mary, wife of the Rev. P. Brett M.A. minister of Charlton-on-Otmoor, 1771; James Moore, 1806; and Rev. John Bruere B.D. 30 years rector, 1776 and Margaret, his wife, 1761, with two children; in the churchyard are the remains of a cross, consisting of a shaft, raised on three steps. The register dates from the year 1571. The living is a rectory, in the gift of Trinity College, Oxford and held since 1876 by the Rev. William Laxton M.A. of that college; the value of the living averages about £320 a year, with a residence. The children of this parish attend the school at Charlton-on-Otmoor. Here are two mineral springs, and across what was formerly the common of Otmoor, a Roman road passes from Beckley to the Roman station of Alcester. Lieut.-General Charles Sawyer, who is lord of the manor, Mr. Staples Browne and Magdalen College, Oxford, are the principal landowners. The soil is chiefly of clay and arable; subsoil, clay. The chief crops are wheat, beans and barley. The area is 1,317A. 1R. 25P.; rateable value, £1,497; the population in 1881 was 150.

OXFORD.

THIS city, the capital of and a polling place for the county, the see of a bishop and the seat of a university, with a distinct jurisdiction of its own, is situated in the midst of fertile meadows at the confluence of and lying between the rivers Cherwell and Isis, which surround it on the east, west and south and separate it from Berkshire. Oxford is locally in the hundred of Bullingdon, giving its name to a rural deanery and archdeaconry, and is 63 miles from London, 27 north-west from Reading, 15 west from Thame, 6 north from Abingdon, 23 south from Banbury, 42 from Leamington, 27 north-east from Faringdon, 28 south-west from Aylesbury, 46 from Windsor, 56 from Worcester, 67 from Gloucester, 66 from Birmingham, 75 from Bristol and 150 from Exeter, all by railway. It has two railways, the London and North Western, a branch from Bletchley Junction, on the main line, 31½ miles from Oxford; and the Great Western, a branch from Didcot Junction, on the main line, opened to Oxford June 12th, 1844, now having direct communication with the North viâ Birmingham; both afford communication with London, but by the former line the distance is 78 miles, and the trains are less frequent. For poor law purposes the city is under a local act and includes all the parishes in the city, except St. Clements, St. Giles and St. John, which are in Headington union. The history of the justly-famed University is involved in much obscurity. Alfred the Great, who is stated to have resided here with his three sons, is said by Asser to have founded three schools at this place for philosophy, grammar and divinity, in June, 872, near the present site of University College, but the legitimate date of the foundation of that college is not earlier than 1280, while Merton College, established at Malden, in Surrey, in 1264, was removed to Oxford in 1274, and refounded on a site purchased for this purpose by Walter de Merton, in 1267, and it is from this period, rather than any earlier, that Oxford, as a University, may be said to exist. The real history of the city may be said to date from the year 912, when, as the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle records, "King Edward (called the 'Elder') took possession of London and Oxford and all lands which thereto belonged." King Alfred, born at Wantage, 16 miles from Oxford, Oct. 25th, 849, is believed to have sojourned in the city in 886, and Athelstan is said to have established a mint here in 925. Edmund "Ironsides" met his death at Oxford, Nov. 20th 1017, by the treachery of Eadric; and in the reign of Edward "the Martyr" the city was twice besieged by the Danes, eventually submitting to Sweyn in 1013. The Witenagemote, or Great Council of the Anglo-Saxons, was several times convened on this spot, and after their reconciliation with the Danes in 1018, it included representatives of both races. In 1067 William the Conqueror besieged and took the city and bestowed its castle upon Robert D'Oyley, one of his followers. The Empress Maude having subsequently obtained possession of the castle, was so closely besieged therein by King Stephen that she only escaped being made a prisoner by passing the Isis, then frozen, and travelling on foot through deep snow to Abingdon, 6 miles distant, whence she took horse for Wallingford Castle. Richard I. and John were both born at Beaumont Palace, in Oxford, the former in 1156 and the latter in 1166. Henry III. visited the city in 1227 and again in 1234 (when he resided in state at Osney Abbey) and 1247; the Parliament of 1264, known as the "Mad Parliament," met here, and framed a code of statutes called "The Provisions of Oxford," from which the present system of political representation may be said to have originated; and in 1297 Edward I. granted to the citizens the privilege of electing two burgesses in Parliament, the first of whom were Thomas de Sawy and Andrew de Pyrie. Edward II. frequently visited Oxford, residing at Beanmont Palace, which he presented to Carmelites or White Friars. Edward III. was educated at Balliol College and frequently revisited the city, granting it in 1330 a commission of the peace, and to the University additional privileges in 1356-7. In 1354 a desperate Gown and Town riot began on St. Scholastica's day, Feb. 10th, and lasted three days, during which 40 students and 23 townsmen lost their lives. Edward the Black Prince studied at Queen's College in 1341-2 and his son, Richard II. confirmed to the University all its former privileges. Henry V. also matriculated at Queen's College, and his successor, Henry VI. who visited the place in 1447, is said to have received his education at the University. Edward IV. with his Queen, came to Oxford in 1481 and were entertained by its founder at Magdalen College, where also, soon after his accession, Richard III. held his court and heard disputations in the college hall. Henry VII. was received at Oxford with great rejoicing in 1488, and his son, Prince Arthur, was a guest at Magdalen College in 1501. Henry VIII. visited the city thrice, in 1510, 1518 and 1533 and founded the See of Oxford, Jan. 6th, 1542; his widow, Queen Catherine Parr, arrived in Oxford July 15th, 1548, and was received and banqueted at Magdalen College. On Oct. 16th, 1555, took place the martyrdom of Bishops Ridley and Latimer, near to a spot in the Broad street, now marked by an iron cross; and on March 21st, in the following year, Archbishop Cranmer suffered death at the same stake. Queen Elizabeth incorporated the University in 1571, granting at the same time divers new and special privileges; and visited the city in 1566, 1574 and 1592. In July, 1577, occurred the Black Assize, when, within 40 days, the Lord Chief Baron, Sir Robert Bell and Sir Robert D'Oyley, High Sheriff, with about 300 more, were carried off by gaol fever. In 1574 armorial bearings were confirmed to the city during the visitation, of R. Lee, Portcullis. James I. in the first year of his reign, removed his court hither and came in great state in August, 1605, and subsequently in the years 1614, 1615, 1621 and 1624. On account of the plague in London Charles I. held his Court and Parliament at Oxford in 1625, and in 1629 came with his Queen Henrietta; throughout the Civil War the city adhered to the royal cause, and eventually surrendered to the Parliamentary forces only by order of the King, May 18th, 1646. Charles II. visited Oxford twice, in 1665 and 1681 and held two Parliaments here; James II. only once, in 1687, and William III. on one occasion, in 1695. Queen Anne spent one day at Oxford with her Consort, Prince George of Denmark, on their way to Bath, August 24th, 1702, having previously visited the city when Princess Anne, in 1688. In the first year of the reign of George I. Oxford was the scene of serious Jacobin riots, during which three Nonconformist meeting-houses were destroyed and great excesses committed, and on Dec. 5th, 1715, began an intense frost which continued for 10 weeks, the Isis being entirely frozen up. Neither George I. or II. visited the city, but George III. honoured it by his presence in 1785 and again in 1786, being accompanied on both occasions by the Queen and Princesses. In July, 1802, Lord Nelson arrived in Oxford and received the honorary degree of D.C.L. and the freedom of the city in a gold box. On Tuesday, June 14th, 1814, the Prince Regent, the Emperor Alexander of Russia, the King of Prussia, the Grand Duchesses of Russia and Oldenburgh, the Dukes of York and Wellington, Marshal Blücher and various other royal and distinguished personages, were received in Oxford with great ceremony and magnificently entertained, the Mayor and Town Clerk being both knighted in honour of the visit. During the reign of William IV. his Queen, Adelaide, sojourned for three days in Oct. 1835, at the "Angel Hotel," and on 8th Nov. 1832, the Princess Victoria, accompanied by the Duchess of Kent, passed through the city and received loyal addresses. Her present Majesty, since her accession, has twice visited the city; first on June 15th, 1841, together with the Prince Consort and a numerous suite; and more recently, on Dec. 12th, 1860, during the undergraduate residence of the Prince of Wales, who was matriculated at Christ Church, Oct. 18th, 1859. The late Prince Consort was a frequent visitor during his lifetime, his last visit being paid only twelve months previous to his decease in 1861. In 1872 Prince Leopold entered at Christ Church, and the Crown Prince of Denmark and Prince Hassan of Egypt are also members of the same foundation. The city of Oxford, including its suburbs, comprises an area of at least 3 miles in circumference, extending a mile and a quarter from the eastern side to the western, and nearly as far from north to south. The city is in form an ellipse, and was formerly environed by a wall, with bastions about 150 feet distant from each other, of which a considerable portion still forms the north and east boundary of New College gardens; the walls were completely restored in 1380 by the special order of King Richard II. and on the foundation of New College the perpetual repair of the fortifications was undertaken by Wykeham. There are four principal entrances into Oxford, three of which are over bridges; Magdalen bridge, on the eastern side, which crosses two branches of the Cherwell, is 526 feet in length and was erected in 1779, under the direction of Mr. Gwynn, at a cost of £8,000; it is now (1882) being widened on the south side to the extent of 20 feet, under the superintendence of the borough engineer. At the north-west end of the bridge the piers and abutments are completed as far as the springing of the arches and the retaining wall between these arches and the central land arch carried up to the height for the side parapet. The massive piles for the foundation and retaining walls have been driven by Lacour's steam pile-driving machine, the tops of the foundation piles being 3ft. 6in. below the river bed. The stone which is being used for the face work is from the Taynton Quarries, and for the work below the water-line from the Stamworth quarries in Lancashire. The carved key-stones of the old bridge are being carefully copied by Mr. Grafton, Bullingdon Road, Oxford, and the river bed beneath both old and new bridges is being deepened to the extent of 3ft. 6in. under the supervision of the Thames Valley Drainage Commissioners; the High Street, one of the noblest thoroughfares in Europe, stretches westward from this bridge through the greater part of the city; Folly bridge, formerly called "Grand pont," crosses the Isis and forms the approach to Oxford from the south, terminating in St. Aldate's street. On the west are several bridges, which cross either the Oxford canal or branches of the Isis, on a road familiarly known as the "Seven Bridges Road;" only six, however, of these bridges are now visible; Hythe bridge, the one nearest to the city, forming part of a level street known as the New Road. The canal, which extends to the Coventry canal, was begun in 1754 and completed in 1790; it is 91½ miles in length and is the property of a company. The architectural views of the city in every direction are singularly interesting. From Cumnor Hill, on the north-west, the prospect resembles that from the hills above Cologne. The towers, spires and pinnacles of various lofty edifices happily grouped, combine to the greatest advantage with the ponderous dome of the former Radcliffe Library (now an additional reading-room to the Bodleian Library and known as the "Camera Bodleiana"); without any monotonous break of the horizontal line, such as occurs in the views of Rome from a similar eminence, where domes are infinitely repeated, from the immensity of St. Peter's to the diminutive cupola of a convent. From the second hill near Bagley Wood, to the south-west, the landscape is foreshortened, with the hall of Christ Church as the principal object and Magdalen Tower to the east, while viewed from the Godstow meadows on the north, with the wide sweep of the upper river in the foreground, the city looks almost like another Venice. From Headington Hill, Iffley and Nuneham, the great features change their position without losing their beauty, and as most of the grand buildings of Oxford approach nearly to each other, the accidental grouping of them from different points of view affords both surprise and pleasure; these buildings, singly considered, have sufficient merit to detain the artist, being in themselves rich examples both of the Gothic and the Palladian styles, and worthy monuments of the skill and taste of the most eminent artists which England has successively produced. It has been observed by an elegant critic that the architectural beauties of Oxford, as a whole, exceed those of any city in the British empire. With the exception of Rome, Florence, Venice and Genoa, Oxford will find few rivals on the Continent; so grand and varied a group of towers, turrets, spires and cupolas must, on his approach, strike every traveller with admiration of a city where learning rears her head amid so much surrounding splendour.

The High street of Oxford, a noble thoroughfare 2,038 feet in length and 85 feet broad, is admired not only for its extent, but for the graceful curvature which it exhibits, and the number of public buildings, in various styles of architecture, with which it is adorned. At Carfax (popularly derived from quatre voies, Lat. quadrivium, four ways), the four principal streets of the city, viz., the High street, Corn Market street, leading into St. Giles' street; St. Aldate's street; and Queen street converge to a centre. Carfax conduit, a quadrangular structure of singular design, erected in 1610 by Otho Nicholson, a student of Christ Church, at a cost of £2,500, formerly stood at the junction of the four streets, but was taken down in 1787 and presented to the Earl of Harcourt, who re-erected it in Nuneham Park, where it still stands.

The Corporation of Oxford ranks among the most ancient in the kingdom, and is mentioned in the Saxon Chronicle in 1013 in association with that of London, to the privileges of which its own closely corresponded. The Mayor of Oxford holds the right of being royal butler at the coronation of English sovereigns, an office created by Henry I. in 1128 and confirmed by Richard I. The borough, comprising 14 parishes, with portions of 4 others at the city boundaries, is divided into five wards, viz. Central, East, North, South and West, with a total of about 6,000 burgesses, including nearly 700 females. The officers of the city and borough, appointed under the Municipal Corporation Act of 1835, are the Mayor, High Steward, Recorder, ten Aldermen, Sheriff and Conservator of Port Meadow and the Fisheries, thirty Councillors, a Town Clerk (who is also clerk of the peace for the city), four City Lecturers, a Coroner, three Auditors, Mace Bearer and other officers. Charters were granted to Oxford by Henry II. King John, in 1199; Henry III. in 1257; Edward I. in 1301; and by James I. in 1605, this last being the charter under which the city of Oxford was governed previous to the passing of the Municipal Reform Act of Sept. 1835. The sanitary regulations of the city are carried out by a Local Board of 47 members, 4 elected by convocation, 11 by heads of colleges and halls, 16 by the Town Council and the remainder by the different parishes.

The city is well supplied with water by the corporation, on the constant service system. The pumping station is situate at South Hinksey (Berks) and the service reservoir, holding 1,250,000 gallons, at Headington: the mains have been extended on the north to supply Summertown, on the east to Marston, and on the Cowley Road to the military barracks.

Many meetings of Parliament are recorded to have taken place at Oxford, the last of which was in the reign of Charles II. in 1681. The city has regularly sent two members to Parliament from the reign of Edward I. but both seats are now vacant; the right of election is defined by the Reform Act, and the mayor is the returning officer. By the Boundary Act, 1868, the Parliamentary limits were extended and now include the remainder of the parishes of St. Clement and St. Giles, which are not in the municipal borough, and also parts of Cowley, Headington, Iffley and Marston, with South Hinksey (Berks).

Oxford has conferred the title of earl on the families of de Vere and Harley, but the title is now extinct.

THE SEE OF OXFORD.

The see of Oxford constituted part of the diocese of Lincoln until the year 1542, when Henry VIII. erected it into a bishopric, with a jurisdiction extending over the entire county of Oxford, which he endowed with the estates of the dissolved monasteries of Osney and Abingdon, assigning at the same time the abbey church of Osney as a cathedral to the diocese. This great Augustinian abbey, situated in the suburbs of the present city of Oxford, or Ouseneyford, was founded by Robert D'Oyley, the second (nephew to the first of that name) at the desire of his wife Edith, in the reign of Henry I. A.D. 1129; and Robert King, last abbot of Osney, was appointed bishop of the new see, 1st September, 1542; Henry VIII. 9th June, 1545, translated the episcopal see to the cathedral church of Christ, in Oxford, attached to the college founded by Wolsey in 1525, on the site of the suppressed priory of St. Frideswide and refounded by the King in 1532; and granted some of the estates which had been appropriated by Cardinal Wolsey to the maintenance of his college to the Dean and Chapter: the value of the see, as reported by the commissioners for inquiring into the ecclesiastical revenues, was £2,400 per annum; but the bishop receives at the present time, by arrangement with the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, £5,000 a year; the present bishop, consecrated in 1869, is the Right Rev. John Fielder Mackarness D.D. formerly fellow of Exeter College, and Chancellor of the Order of the Garter, who resides at Cuddesdon Palace, near Wheatley, in this county; London address, Athenæum Club.

The CATHEDRAL of Christ Church, Oxford, the smallest of English Cathedrals, was originally the church of the Priory of St. Frideswide, surrendered to Cardinal Wolsey in 1522, and in style belongs chiefly to the Transition Norman and Early English periods; but portions of the edifice are of later styles down to the Perpendicular; the nave, choir, central tower and transepts (as far as the roof) are late Norman, and were probably erected during the lifetime of Robert de Cricklade or Canutus, the second prior (1150-80), the lower part of the tower and south transept being perhaps of an earlier date; the chapter house, and the upper part of the tower with the spire and St. Frideswide's chapel, are of the thirteenth and early fourteenth centuries, the Lady chapel and cloisters of the fourteenth century; the clerestories, vaulting of the choir, and nave roof were Wolsey's work. The church consists of a choir of five bays with aisles, and on the north the Lady chapel and St. Frideswide's or the Latin chapel, each of four bays; on the south side, entered from the south aisle, St. Lucy's chapel, formerly a vestry; south transept, communicating with the cloisters; north transept, with a western aisle of three bays; central tower and spire, nave of four (originally eight) bays with aisle, a spacious vaulted western entrance, opening into the great quadrangle, chapter house and cloisters. The original west front, with four bays of the nave and the west alley of the cloisters, were destroyed by Wolsey, but one bay, with a portion of the north cloister, and the present western entrance were recovered during the recent restorations; the former south entrance, through the cloister, is still maintained, but access is now usually obtained by the west door, which admits into an ante-chapel on whose walls are memorials to Dean Fell, Charles Lloyd, Bishop of Oxford, 1827-9; Dean Gaisford, 1831-55; Dr. Alex. Nicoll, Regius Professor of Hebrew, and Dr. Edw. Burton, Regius Professor of Divinity. The choir screen, now enclosing the greater part of the existing nave, is Jacobean and deserves notice for its curious mixture of Gothic and Italian detail; above it is an organ gallery, reached by a light iron stair; the organ, built by Father Schmidt in 1680, and improved by Gray and Davison in 1848, was moved hither in 1876 from its former position in the south transept. The massive pillars of the nave are alternately circular and octagonal with large capitals having square abaci, from which spring circular arches with well-defined mouldings, forming in fact the arches of the triforium, here represented by a blind arcade of two arches, set in the tympanum of the main arch; the true arches of the nave spring from half capitals or corbels affixed to the pillars, and are of plain design; the clerestory is Transitional, and the whole arrangement, rare on the continent, is very unusual in England; the fine and lofty arches of the central tower are circular towards the nave and choir, but pointed towards the transepts, all being, however, of the same Transitional character, and the tower is now, as originally, open to the lantern. During the repairs of 1856, a reliquary chamber 7 feet long, 7 high and 5½ feet wide, was discovered immediately under the eastern tower arch, constructed of rude stone work, with two aumbries. The transepts are Late Norman, corresponding in date, and both had at first eastern and western aisles; the large five-light window at the end of the north aisle was presented in 1876 by the Marquess of Lothian, as a memorial to his brother, and represents in gorgeous colouring, "the Expulsion of the Fallen Angels by St. Michael;" below it is the tomb of James Louch or Souch (ob. 1503), a monk of the priory, who left money for the vaulting of the church; the west window by Abraham Van Linge, circa 1631, depicts the story of "Jonah under the Gourd at Nineveh," and there are also memorial windows here to the Revs. Cyril Page and Fremantle, and a monument to Bishop James of Calcutta. In the south aisle are memorial windows to Edward Denison esq. M.P. for Newark, who died at Melbourne, Australia, in 1870; George Rankine Luke, accidentally drowned, 1862; John Walter, accidentally drowned at Bearwood Park, Berks, on Christmas Eve, 1870; and George Manuel Dasent, drowned while bathing at Sandford Lasher, April 30, 1872; adjoining is a tablet to Dr. Pocock, the orientalist and regius professor of Arabic, ob. September 10, 1691, and near this a monument to Sir William, first Viscount Brouncker, of Castle Lyons, Ireland, a stanch royalist, who died at Oxford during the rebellion in November, 1645, and his wife Winifred, who died July 20, 1649, with their effigies in relief; the second bay of the transept aisle opens into St. Lucy's chapel, formerly the vestry, which has an exquisite Decorated east window of flamboyant character; in the coign of the buttress, at the angle of the transept, was discovered, many years since, a singular piece of Norman sculpture representing the fall of Man, the offering of Isaac, and some other subjects unidentified; in this chapel is also the "St. Thomas à Becket" window, containing glass taken from the north aisle, and representing on a diapered ground the murder of the archbishop; at the east corner of St. Lucy's chapel is the altar tomb, with inscribed brass, under a recessed canopy, of Robert King, last abbot of Oseney, and first bishop of Oxford, ob. 1557; this was originally placed in the choir, but was moved hither by Henry King, afterwards Bishop of Chichester, and his brother John, both canons of Christ church and descendants of William, brother of Robert King; the window above the tomb, filled by them with stained glass, represents the bishop fully vested, with Oseney Abbey in the background, while above are the arms of King, impaled with those of the abbey of Oseney and the see of Oxford; this window was removed for safety before the capitulation of Oxford in 1646, and replaced at the Restoration. In the gallery of the south aisle are preserved some fragments of the old Priory, and portions of the actual shrine of St. Frideswide. The choir proper consists of five bays and has circular pillars, capitals less elaborate, and abaci heavier than elsewhere in the church, the arrangement of the triforium and side aisles being the same as in the nave; the Perpendicular vaulting, a magnificent example, was the work of Wolsey, who transformed the whole choir above the triforium; the wall passage of the clerestory remaining, although hidden beneath rich panelling; the lantern-like pendants in which the elaborate fan tracery terminates are said to have been brought from Oseney Abbey; the roof itself is finished westward by a series of figures under highly wrought canopies, set immediately within the choir arch; the Decorated east window, erected in 1854, to commemorate the third centenary of the foundation of the college, and filled with glass by Henri and Alfred Gérente, was removed during the recent restorations, and the whole east end rebuilt as far as could be ascertained, in accordance with its original plan; it now exhibits two deeply recessed Norman windows, surmounted by a wheel window, all stained, and more recently a richly designed reredos has been set up; the pavement is of marble, adorned with incised representations of the seven cardinal virtues, copied from examples in the church of the knights of St. John, Malta; dividing the choir from the aisles are exquisite screens of wrought iron, reproduced in part from the tomb of Queen Eleanor in Westminster Abbey and from other ancient work at Merton College; behind the stalls these are heightened, and at the Dean's and Canon's seats rise into canopies; all the stalls and seats in the choir and nave are now of Italian walnut finely-wrought: the eagle lectern, presented by the Rev. T. V. Bayne, censor, and the Rev. H. L. Thompson, is of pale brass, parcel silvered, with a base of delicate filagree-work and lions supporting shields, bearing the arms of Christ church and the university; the stem, enriched with amethysts and other precious stones, has around it figures of St. Frideswide, Cardinal Wolsey, and Bishop King; the seventh century Bible, bound in velvet and studded with amethysts, was the gift of three of the daughters of the present dean; the pulpit, placed by the fourth pillar on the south side, is of oak and is covered with grotesque carvings; it is probably of the same date as the screen, but is far more interesting and remarkable; the communion table is of cedar, with beautifully carved caps and bosses; the Bible placed upon it was given to the church by Canon Robert King, and was used when Charles I. attended the Cathedral during the civil war; portions of the Cathedral plate, richly chased, are from Oseney Abbey. The bishop's throne, on the south side, was erected as a memorial to the late Bishop Wilberforce, and is of the finest walnut wood; at the back is a medallion portrait of the bishop in high relief, and a lofty canopy with figures of the evangelists and various saints rises above the stall. In the south choir aisle, a Transitional work, and part of the original Norman church, the east window has been filled with stained glass in memory of G. G. Fortescue, of Boconnoc, who died at Algiers in 1858; the north choir aisle is of the same date and character as the aisle opposite, the vaulting being pure Norman; adjoining it on the north is the Lady chapel, an Early English addition made towards the middle of the thirteenth century; affixed to pillars at its western end are monuments with effigies to Thomas Godwin, dean (1565-7), ob. 1620, and to Robert Burton, author of the "Anatomy of Melancholy" and a student of the college, ob. 1639, placed by his brother, William Burton, the historian of Leicestershire; arranged under the arches on the north side are several tombs of much interest; the first, westward, undoubtedly consists of two distinct memorials; the lower portion is an altar tomb panelled round the sides with quatrefoils enclosing shields of arms, and supports the recumbent figure of an armed knight; the second monument, also an altar tomb, placed under a triple canopy of Early Decorated work, bears the effigy of a prior, fully vested; further eastward is the altar tomb of Elizabeth, Lady Montacute, ob. 1353, with her effigy; the sides of the tomb are panelled and adorned with figures of two abbesses of Barking, her daughters, Bishop Simon, of Ely, her son, and others; with the shields of Montfort, Montacute and Furnivall. The east window of this chapel is a memorial to Frederick Grantham Vyner, of Christ church, murdered by Greek brigands at Delissi, Greece, April 21, 1870, and near this is St. Cecilia's window, presented by Dr. Corfe in 1875.

The Northern or Latin chapel (so called from the Latin service read in it at the beginning of Term), and known also as St. Frideswide's chapel, is Decorated, and is generally said to have been built by Lady Montacute as her own charity; the east window, inserted as a memorial to Canon Bull, who died in 1859, is of new, but strangely incongruous Venetian tracery, filled with stained glass, exhibiting, in a series of designs, the life and death of St. Frideswide; the stalls and desks, chiefly of Wolsey's time, and unusually fine, were formerly in the choir; at the south-east angle is the so-called shrine of St. Frideswide, being in fact the watching chamber, which here, as at St. Alban's and elsewhere, was placed near the shrine for the use of the monks who guarded it; this structure is of Late Perpendicular date, and consists of three stages, the lowermost comprising an altar tomb of stone with a stone canopy, from one side of which a narrow flight of stairs gives access to the second stage, or watching chamber proper, which is arcaded all round, and has crocketted canopied arches and a cornice; the third stage is similar, but its arches and canopies are more enriched; on the floor are the memorial stones, with inlaid and illuminated brasses, of Canons Bull, Ogilvie, Shirley and others. In the nave is a monument, with bust and emblems of death, to Henry Aldrich D.D. dean of Christ Church, 1689 to 1711, scholar, musician and architect; here also was buried George Berkeley, Bishop of Cloyne, ob. January 14, 1753, over whose grave is an inscribed stone, and affixed to a pillar on the south side, a mural monument with an epitaph by William Markham, afterwards Archbishop of York; and there is a similar memorial to Thomas Tanner D.D. Bishop of St. Asaph and author of the "Notitia Monastica," ob. 1735; the distinguished theologian and controversialist, Dr. E. B. Pusey, Canon of Christ church, and regius professor of Hebrew since 1828, was also interred in the nave on Thursday, September 22, 1882; there are other monuments to William Corne S.T.B. 12 years censor, 1818; Peter Elmsley, S.T.P. principal of St. Alban Hall and Camden professor of history, 1825; Charles Lloyd D.D. Bishop of Oxford, 1829; John Thomas James S.T.P. Bishop of Calcutta, with profile head by Westmacott; Phineas Pett S.T.P. canon, principal of St. Mary Hall, and 12 years archdeacon, 1830; Dr. Alexander Nicoll, regius professor of Hebrew and Dr. Edward Burton, regius professor of divinity; and brasses to John Fitzaleyn, 1452; Edward Courtenay, c. 1460; James Coorthopp, canon of Christ church and dean of Peterborough, 1557; Henry Dow, royal student of Christ church, 1578; Thomas Morris M.A. 1584; Stephen Lence M.A. 1587, with effigy in academicals; John, son of George Bishop, bookseller of London, æt. 18, 1588; Thomas Thornton M.A. 1613; and Thomas Palmer, 1558, with 10 children. A small door in the south aisle of the nave admits to the cloisters, which originally formed a quadrangle: the east walk and portions of the north and south walks remain, and the vaulted roofs have been partially restored in oak; above the south walk rises the ancient refectory of the priory, with large and handsome Perpendicular windows; on the walls of the cloister are memorial tablets to Otho Nicholson, who erected Carfax conduit; Thomas Marsden Jodrell M.A. capt. 35th regt. who fell at Rosetta, April 8, 1807; Charles Taylor

M.A. lieut.-col. 20th Light Dragoons, killed at Vimiera, August 21, 1808, and others; the entrance to the chapter-house, on the east side of the cloisters, is Transition Norman, and apparently of the same date as the church; north of it is a low arched passage, leading to a small and secluded garden on the south side of the Cathedral, where lie buried Philip Pusey M.A. only son of the late Dr. Pusey, and Edith, third daughter of Dr. Liddell, dean of Christ Church, who died in June 1876; the chapter-house itself was rebuilt during the very best Early English period, of which it affords an excellent example and forms a parallelogram, divided into four bays, with vaulting springing from clustered shafts supported on brackets; the eastern portion is entirely filled by an arcade of five arches, three of which are pierced for windows, and the foliage of its clustered capitals, as well as that introduced between the arcade and the roof, is most graceful; the chapter-house contains a chest covered with rich flamboyant panelling, a finely carved Elizabethan table and wainscot of the same period; while in the south wall is fixed the foundation stone of Wolsey's College at Ipswich, rescued from destruction by the Rev. Richard Canning, rector of Harkstead and Freston, Suffolk, who bequeathed it to the dean and chapter in 1789; the inscription on it (at length) runs thus:—"Anno Christi 1528, et regni Henrici Octavi, Regis Angliæ 20, mensis vero Junii 15, positum per Johannem Episcopum Lidensem." This bishop was John Holt, titular Bishop of Lydda, and probably a suffragan of Lincoln. Here is also a portion of the tomb of the wife of William Longespée, Earl of Salisbury, from Oseney Abbey, and portraits of Henry VII. and his queen, Elizabeth of York, Henry VIII, Queens Mary and Elizabeth, Cardinal Wolsey and other dignitaries. The only good exterior view of the Cathedral is to be obtained from the garden of the canon's house adjoining it on the north, but the central tower and spire are well seen from the cloister court; the bells, 10 in number, were taken down in 1870 in consequence of the unsafe condition of the belfry, and re-hung in the new campanile constructed over the hall staircase in 1876-8; the fame of their melody, preserved in the well-known catch by Dean Aldrich "Hark! the bonny Christ Church bells," was widely spread before their removal here, and their names were thus recorded in a rude hexameter: "Hautclere, Douce, Clement, Austin, Marie, Gabriel et John:" of the existing peal, the last five are said to have been brought from Oseney Abbey, of these the 10th, which is the earliest, dates from 1589, the rest are dated 1611-40, and three have inscriptions in old English letters, two, the 8th and 7th, being apparently those referred to in the line above as "Marie" and "John;" the first five date from 1640 to 1747. The church has been several times repaired or refitted since its mutilation by Wolsey, especially in 1856 by Mr. J. Billing, but more particularly during the years 1872-6, when it was completely restored and enlarged under the direction of the late Sir Gilbert Scott R.A. at a cost of £24,000.

The Cathedral register of baptisms dates from 1653; marriages, 1642; burials, 1639.

THE PARISHES AND THEIR CHURCHES.

Oxford, with its suburbs, consists of fourteen parishes, all of which have churches.

All Saints' church, formerly known as "All Hallows'," is in the High street: the old church was one of three churches given and confirmed by King Henry I. to the Canons of St. Frideswide A.D. 1122, and was created a vicarage in 1190; Edward II. presented the church in 1327 to the Bishop of Lincoln, and it continued to be held by his successor until Bishop Flemmyng (1420-31) settled it upon Lincoln College; on Sunday, March 8th, 1699, the spire of the ancient church fell through the centre of the edifice, destroying nearly the whole building; the existing church was erected in 1706-8, from designs by Dr. Henry Aldrich, the accomplished Dean of Christ Church; it has often and justly been praised by critics in architecture, but being constructed of perishable stone many of the projecting parts have lost their sharpness and the admirable details have been impaired; by this, however, its picturesque effect is increased, the mouldering stone blending more happily with the venerable structures by which it is surrounded; it is a rectangular structure of the Corinthian order, 72 feet long, 42 wide, and 50 high, and the entablature, which is remarkably bold, is carried completely round the building and is supported by coupled columns, a mode purely Italian; the columns are not fluted and the frieze is perfectly plain; all its grandeur of appearance is therefore derived from the breadth and justness of its proportions; it is surmounted by an attic and balustrade: at the west end a very fine rusticated tower with balustrading supports a beautiful peristyle of Corinthian columns rising from within it, surmounted by a second balustrade and terminating in a short but graceful spire: the tower contains a light but musical peal of 6 bells, previously cast in 1622, of which the tenor had long been broken, the peal was re-cast a few years ago: the roof of this church is remarkable for the extent of its span, unsupported by a single pillar, and is profusely adorned with Grecian scroll-work, surrounding and enclosing the emblazoned arms of numerous benefactors: the stalls in the chancel are surrounded with a screen of carved oak: the pulpit, together with its sounding board, and the fittings at the east end are very fine specimens of woodwork: at the west end of the church is a large monument in marble to Doctor Edward Tatham, rector of Lincoln College, 1792-1834, erected in 1845, at a cost of £800, and in an alcove formed in the thickness of the south wall is a finely executed recumbent figure in alabaster on a raised tomb, representing Alderman William Levins or Levinz, five times Mayor of Oxford, who died in 1616, at the age of 100: in the former church were many monuments and brasses, including some of the Freres, one of whom was eight times Mayor; 1cwt. of these brasses were taken away during the Commonwealth, and sold for £2 1s.; among existing tablets and tombstones to notable citizens are those to Sir Robert Harrison (twice mayor), Sir Daniel Webb (four times mayor), Sir Joseph Lock (mayor, 1814), and Stephen Richardson, (chamberlain 1796, and bailiff 1799): the interior of the church was restored and new windows, in keeping with the style of architecture, inserted in 1866: the organ was rebuilt in 1879: there are about 300 sittings, of which 200 are assigned to parishioners. The register dates from the year 1549. The living is a vicarage, though properly called a chaplaincy, according to the statutes of Lincoln College, in which society the patronage is vested; yearly value £93, and held since 1861 by the Rev. William Walter Merry M.A. fellow of Lincoln College, public orator in the University of Oxford, and surrogate. The yearly charities of this parish include £22 for the clergy; £11 for church purposes; about £35 for pensioners; and about £8 for distribution in money and kind.

St. Aldate's church, or St. Old's, is an edifice of great antiquity, named after St. Eldad, or Aldate, a British saint, who lived about A.D. 450: according to Speed it was founded or restored about 1004: the existing fabric is composed of portions of various styles, but is on the whole a venerable structure and derives additional interest from the comparatively perfect state in which it remains, and the satisfactory account that has been preserved of the greater part of it: it consists of chancel, with north chapel, nave, aisles and a low tower, with angle buttresses and a plain parapet; surmounted by four pinnacles, from within which rises an octangular spire and contains 6 bells, four of which date from 1620 to 1654, the fifth has an early dedication to St. John, and there is a priest's bell dated 1780; the chancel encloses some of the oldest parts of the building, particularly an arcade of five small circular arches on the north side, which certainly date from not long after the Norman Conquest: the east window of five lights is stained, but is completely overgrown on the outside by the luxuriant tendrils of the vitis recuspidata, so that not even the tracery can be seen; the south aisle, called the Trinity chapel in 1517, was built 9. Edward III. by Sir John de Docklington, a fishmonger, and several times mayor; it retains a piscina and another niche, and behind it is a vaulted crypt; the north aisle, originally called from its dedication St. Saviour's chapel, was built in 1455 by Philip Polton, fellow of All Souls' and archdeacon of Gloucester; the columns of the arcade date from 1581 only; there are several monuments of interest, the chief being that of John Noble LL.B. Principal of Broadgates Hall (now Pembroke College), ob. 2 June, 1522; this is an altar tomb, enriched on the sides with double-headed canopies, each enclosing an angel bearing shield, on the top is a full-sized recumbent figure of the Principal, robed, and around the margin an inscription in latin: the church also contains brasses to Lewis and Owen Griffin, brothers, 1607, with ten elegant verses; to Arthur Strode, of Devon, the Middle Temple and Broadgates Hall 1612, with four verses; and to Nicholas Rooke, of Devon, and B.A. of Broadgates Hall, with effigy in academic dress, and six verses: the church was restored and enlarged in 1862, and the tower and spire were rebuilt in 1873-4; these works being carried out at a cost of about £6,000, under the direction of Mr. J. T. Christopher, architect, of London: there are 800 sittings, of which 300 are free. The register dates from the year 1678. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £277, with 12 acres of glebe, in the patronage of the trustees of the late Rev. Charles Simeon, and held since 1869 by the Rev. Alfred Millard William Christopher M.A. of Jesus College, Cambridge, and Trinity College, Oxford. The parish includes the hamlet of Grandpont, in Berkshire. The parochial charities include £5 yearly for apprenticing, about £7 for the clergy, £66 for church repairs, and £37 12s. for distribution.

St. Clement's is a suburb at the eastern end of the city. The ancient church stood near Magdalen bridge, but was removed in 1828 on the erection of the present church, which is an edifice in a modified Norman style, consisting of clerestoried nave, aisle and a western tower containing 3 bells; the arcades have semicircular arches and massive pillars, with small and varied capitals; the new site, which has been well laid out, and has now a pleasant avenue of limes with other trees, is on the west side of the Marston road, and near the Cherwell: the church was built from designs by Mr. D. Robertson, at a cost of £6,500, and was restored in 1871 at a cost of £1,100: the east window is stained: there are sittings for 800 persons, all free. The register of baptisms and marriages dates from the year 1666; burials, 1669. The living is a rectory, yearly value £320, formerly in the gift of the Lord Chancellor but sold by him to the Rev. B. P. Symons D.D. late warden of Wadham College, and now in the gift of trustees, and held since 1878 by the Rev. Francis Pilcher M.A. of Oriel College, Oxford. The parochial charities include a yearly sum of about £5 bequeathed by Mr. Bridgwater, in 1854, for fuel shared between this parish and St. Ebbe's, £62 10s. for education, the same amount for apprenticing, about £187 for church repairs, and £63 for distribution in money.

St. Cross, or Holywell church, occupying a sequestered site near the eastern extremity of the street of the same name, at the north-eastern boundary of the city, is, correctly speaking, a chapel belonging to the church of St. Peter-in-the-East; it was dedicated to the Holy Cross and dates from about 1160, when it was built at the expense of Hugo de St. Petro of Oxford, although Robert D'Oiley is the reputed founder, and the existing structure appears to be in part his work: it consists of chancel, nave, with clerestory lighted by small quatrefoil openings, aisles, south porch and a western tower containing 6 bells, dating from 1620 to 1726: the chancel arch, the only remnant of the first church, is circular, and is supported on chamfered corbels, with star ornament; the nave is of three bays, and has octagonal pillars on the north and round pillars on the south side, the north and south tower arches forming an additional bay: the windows are chiefly Perpendicular, and nearly all are stained: the pulpit of stone is affixed to the wall on the south side of the chancel arch and is entered by a stair piercing the wall at the east end of the south aisle in trefoiled niche with pedestal; the upper part of the embattled tower was erected about the year 1464, by Henry Sever, warden of Merton College (1455-71); the porch has the date 1592 over the door, with the arms of Merton College; in the north aisle are mural monuments to George Seidel D.D. a native of Lissa, in Poland, ob. 1761, and Sophia Augusta, his wife, ob. 1752; John Seidel M.A. ob. 1747, and Conrad George, ob. 1734, his sons; William Thorpe, twice Mayor of Oxford, ob. 1800, and his wives, Elizabeth and Mary; and to James Beardwell esq. "yeoman of his Majesty's wine cellar": there are in the church several brasses to Agnes, wife of Thomas Hopper, physician and former fellow of New College, and her daughter, Jane, both deceased in 1625, with kneeling effigies; and to Eliza, third wife of Thomas Franklin, with effigy in bed, and four children, with six verses, 1622; in the chancel was buried John Snell, a benefactor to Balliol College, and in the churchyard are altar tombs to William Merryman, ob. 1628; and Anne, his wife, ob. 1610; and to Margaret, wife of Edward Strickland, ob. 1680, with others of that name to 1835; there are other memorials to William Thorpe, thrice Mayor of Oxford, ob. 1869; Stephen Elvey Mus. Doc. ob. 1860; here also was buried Thomas Holt, of York, architect, ob. 1624, who furnished the designs for the old schools; and Lady Mackworth: the church has 700 sittings, all free, and the interior is now (1882) being thoroughly cleaned and repaired at an estimated cost of £80: in 1838 an aisle was added to the north side and in 1843 a corresponding aisle on the south, when the whole was seated with open benches. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1653; marriages, 1657. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £150 with residence, in the gift of Merton College and held since 1871 by the Rev. George Noel Freeling M.A. fellow and chaplain of Merton College and rural dean of Oxford. Merryman and Coxeter's charities of £60 were applied in rebuilding the church wall and a gallery in the church; Benjamin Hayne's charity of £6 yearly, bequeathed in 1810, is distributed in bread.

To the south and east of the church extends the secluded and beautiful little cemetery of Holy Cross, 1¼ acres in extent, with its chapel and lodge, the last resting place of many distinguished members of the university and residents of note; it serves for the parishes of St. Cross, All Saints, John the Baptist, St. Mary the Virgin, and St. Peter-in-the-East. The Holy Well, from which the parish derives its name, was situated north of the church, and was dedicated to SS. Winifred and Margaret; in 1848 Dr. Fitzjames, warden, of Merton, erected a stone building over it, but the well is now covered by the north wall of the cemetery. Immediately adjoining the church on the north is the ancient manor house, rebuilt in 1506, and now converted into the Oxford female penitentiary, attached to which is a small chapel; the double entrenchments thrown up for the defence of the city during the civil war may still be distinctly traced in Holywell green and the adjacent meadows.

St. Ebbe's church, in St. Ebbe's street, one of the most ancient of the city churches, was rebuilt in the Early Decorated style, under the direction of Mr. W. Fisher, in 1814-16, at a cost of about £3,000, and re-opened February 9th, 1817; it now consists of chancel, nave, south aisle and a tower containing 6 bells, re-cast from the former peal of three, in 1790; two were added in 1803 by the gifts of Mr. Baker and Mr. Scarsbrook; the tower and a fine Norman doorway, carefully reconstructed in the vestry, are the only remaining portions of the old church, which was given by Alan Earl of Cornwall, in 1005, to the Abbey of Eynsham and was dedicated to St. Ebbe or Ebba, daughter of Ethelfrid, King of Northumberland, who became abbess of Coldingham and died in the year 683: the font was given by the late Dr. Griffith, master of University College: there are 500 sittings, of which 200 are free. The register dates from the year 1660. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £250 with residence, formerly in the gift of the Lord Chancellor, but sold by him, under the Augmentation Act, to Trustees, and held since 1880 by the Rev. John Arkell M.A. Pembroke College, Oxford. The parochial charities include about £83 a year for church repairs, £6 for distribution in bread, and Palmer's gift of £5 5s. left in 1815, for two domestic servants and two aged females.

St. Giles's church, placed at the northern extremity of the street of the same name, on the road to Woodstock, is one of the earliest ecclesiastical structures in Oxford, portions of its fabric being Transitional and dating from circa 1280; it consists of chancel, with south aisles, half-clerestoried nave, south porch aisles and a western embattled tower, containing 6 bells, all of which bear inscriptions in latin, without dates, the fourth having the legend "Sonitus Egidii conscendat culmina coeli"; of the existing church, the tower, built of rubble and small stones, united by a strong cement, and tied by quoins of masonry in a very durable and substantial manner, is evidently the oldest part; the nave is divided from the aisles by arcades of pointed arches on cylindrical columns, with plain capitals; the south clerestory is a modern addition; the south aisle is Early English, and is lighted by a series of lancets; the chapel at its eastern end, probably St. Mary's chantry, dates from 1260: the north aisle appears to have originally formed several distinct chapels, each lighted by double or triple lancet windows, beneath which is an arcade of five semicircular arches at unequal distances; at the east end is a piscina: the roof forms four separate gables, rising to the top of the nave parapet, this aisle dates from 1220; the chancel corresponds in character to the tower, both belonging to the period 1200-20; the font is of an unusually elegant and rare design, and consists of a square basin, surrounded on every side with broad Perpendicular mouldings, divided by rows of tooth-ornament, and is supported on a short central shaft, with slender columns at each angle: in the north aisle is buried Dr. Richard Rawlinson, founder in 1795 of the Professorship of Anglo-Saxon, whose heart is preserved in the chapel of St. John's College; Dr. William Juxon, Archbishop of Canterbury, who attended Charles I. on the scaffold, was rector here 1609-15; and Dr. Thomas Turner, chaplain to the King while a prisoner at Carisbrooke, rector, 1623-8. The church has 900 sittings, all of which are free. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1576; marriages, 1599; burials, 1605. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £160, in the patronage of St. John's College and held since 1880 by the Rev. Lancelot Lambert Sharpe B.D. fellow of that College. The charities of this parish include £8 8s. yearly for clothing and education, £23 for the clergy, and about £85 for distribution.

The church of St. John the Baptist, called in ancient times "St. John within the Walls," originally belonged to Reading Abbey, the monks of which house gave it in 1265 to Walter de Merton, the founder of Merton College, an continues to this day parochial as well as collegiate, the incumbency being always held by one of the fellows of Merton. The church, which is in the Decorated and Perpendicular styles, consists of choir and transepts and a central tower containing 8 bells; there were originally 5, cast in 1422, chiefly at the cost of Dr. Henry Abendon, then warden; they were converted from 5 to 8 in 1656, by Michael Derby, but not being well done, they were re-cast in 1680 by Christopher Hodson, of London: the building was originally intended to be cruciform, as appears from the remains of the three western arches, now blocked with masonry, but the design for reasons unknown, was never completed; the tower of the church was built in 1424, by Thomas Rodbourne, Bishop of St. David's and warden of Merton College, and though not, perhaps, sufficiently lofty, has a stately appearance; it is of two stages, the upper being divided on each side into two compartments, each containing a tall Perpendicular window, with rich tracery, the whole terminates in an open embattled parapet, crowned with eight crocketed pinnacles, those at the angles bearing vanes and the remainder crosses; the external panelling of the tower and the pinnacles show a later style of architecture than the rest of the chapel: the corbels on the northern side of the church exhibit sculpture of better design and execution than any of the same kind in Oxford, and the whole elevation of the northern transept towards the street, with the fine Perpendicular window and canopied niches, presents a very beautiful architectural composition: the great east window of this church is, perhaps, the most perfect instance of spreading the mullions with so rich an effect now in existence: the choir, 110 feet in length, was begun in 1277, and has, in addition to the very fine east window, fourteen others, seven on either side, of Decorated work, and extremely beautiful both in proportion and design, retaining also in great part the original glass; the seven lights of the east window exhibit the principal events in the life of Christ, executed by W. Price, in 1700; the altar piece is a picture of the Crucifixion, presented by John Skip esq. and usually attributed to Tintoretto: the sedilia, stalls and desks, as well as the flooring, were restored in 1854, under the direction of Mr. Butterfield; the ceiling being at the same reconstructed and richly decorated with figures of the major prophets, evangelists, and fathers of the church, by the Rev. J. H. Pollen M.A.; on the floor of the choir are nine brasses, the finest of which are those to John Bloxham D.D. warden, 1387, and John Whytton, rector of Woodeaton, a benefactor, 1420, both under a canopy, supported by a bracket with tall foliaged shaft; and a large full length effigy of Henry Sever, warden, 1455-71, in a richly embroidered cope, beneath a triple canopy; in the ante-chapel are monuments to Sir Thomas Bodley, founder of the Bodleian Library, 1613; the celebrated Oxford antiquary, Anthony à Wood, who died in 1695; and to Sir Henry Savile, 26th warden, 1622: the University sermon is preached here on SS. Philip and James's Day, May 1: there are 100 sittings, all of which are free. The register dates from 1616. The living is a chaplaincy, yearly value £60, in the gift of Merton College and held since 1882 by the Rev. George Noel Freeling M.A. fellow and chaplain of Merton College and rural dean of Oxford.

St. Martin's, commonly known as Carfax, from its situation at the meeting of the four main streets, (quadrivium or quatre voies) of the city, was traditionally founded by King Edward the elder, in 920; it was rebuilt, with the exception of the ancient tower, in 1820-2, wholly in the Perpendicular style, from designs by Mr. Plowman, architect, of Oxford; the foundation stone being laid Oct. 23, 1820, and the building consecrated June 14, 1822; it consists of nave and aisles and a western battlemented tower containing 6 bells, dating from 1676 to 1678; the tower is said to have originally been much higher, but was lowered in the 14 Edward III. by command of the King, in order that the townsmen might no longer annoy the scholars with "arrows and stones" thrown from its summit; upon the end of the south aisle, previous to the rebuilding, rose a small square chamber, containing a clock, with a dial on its eastern side, on either side of which, beneath a slight canopy, supported on corbel shafts, were figures with hammers which struck the quarters, and hence known as the "quarter boys," these are now in the free library: a sheltered recess at the east end of the church, erected in 1546, and known as "penniless bench," was taken down in 1747: on the south side of the church, in the fourteenth century, stood a tavern called "Swindlestock," and subsequently the "Mermaid," in which on the festival of St. Scholastica, Feb. 10, 1354, a serious gown and town riot originated in a quarrel between John de Croydon, the landlord, and some scholars, who were drinking wine there, in which not less than 40 students and 60 townfolks were slain, and in consequence of which the mayor and principal authorities, being brought before a tribunal, were condemned to attend annually at St. Mary's church, while a mass was celebrated for the souls of the slain students, and each thereafter to pay 1d.; this penal solemnity continued to be observed with various modifications until 1825, when an oath to hold intact all the ancient privileges of the University was substituted on the part of the city, and this was regularly taken until 1854: the font, though a good deal mutilated, is a good example of fourteenth century work; it is octagonal with small buttresses at the angles, the intervening spaces being panelled and containing figures; above this is a band of quatrefoils, surmounted in turn by another bearing alternate shields and trefoiled panels: in the old church Shakespeare stood as godfather to Sir William Davenant, the son of John Davenant, Vintner, of the Crown inn, Corn market, who was baptised here, March 3, 1606; and here also was buried Robert Wisdome, archdeacon of Ely, anthor of a Metrical version of the Scriptures: an impress of a brass formerly here, with the effigy of a man in armour, c. 1520, is preserved at the Archæological Institute. St. Martin's being the city church, the mayor and corporation, with their officers, attend Divine service here in semi-state, every Sunday morning, the lecturer for the day accompanying the mayor in the procession from the Town Hall. The church has sittings for 700 persons, of which 200 are free. The register dates from the year 1569. The living is a rectory net yearly value £100, in the gift of the Lord Chancellor and held since 1872 by the Rev. Carteret John Halford Fletcher M.A. of Worcester College; the yearly charities of this parish include £50 for church purposes, and £1 11s. for distribution.

There are also four city lecturers appointed by the corporation, viz.:—Rev. William Simcox Bricknell M.A. of Worcester College, vicar of Eynsham and surrogate; Rev. Carteret John Halford Fletcher M.A. of Worcester College, rector; Rev. Robert Gandell M.A. of Magdalen Hall, chaplain of Corpus Christi college and Laudian Professor of Arabic; and Rev. George Francis Lovell M.A. of Balliol College, vice-principal of St. Edmund Hall; these lectureships were first founded January 26, 1586, by order of the City Council, each lecturer to receive annually 20 marks (£13 6s. 8d.). From 1647 to 1662, there were but two lecturers, but from the latter year four were again appointed and that number has since been maintained; from 1586 to 1778, the lecturers were paid by the result of a special tax; in 1778 they were endowed by the Earl of Lichfield with £1,500, and with £500 by Mr. William Wickham a citizen; the whole amount was ultimately invested in Oxford Canal shares, now producing a yearly stipend of £10 for each lecturer; the four city lectureships still preserve their ancient prestige and are always the object of much competition as a connecting link between the University and the city of Oxford.

The church of St. Mary the Virgin, one of the principal ornaments of the High street, was originally a Norman edifice, erected c. 1139, but the whole of the existing structure, with the exception of the Decorated tower and spire, is Perpendicular: it consists of a large chancel with chapel on the north side, nave, aisles, south porch and a tower with a spire on the north side, containing a very fine peal of 6 bells, dated respectively 1731, 1623, 1641, 1612 (two) and 1639; the 4th bell has two lines of music pricked out round the waist; the entire length of the church is about 162 feet and the breadth 54 feet; the height of the nave roof is 70 feet: the chancel is said to have been built by Walter Lyhert, provost of Oriel, and afterwards Bishop of Norwich; it is lighted by lofty windows reaching to the roof, and retains some remains of the original reredos; Amy (Robsart) wife of Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, who met her death at Cumnor Hall, September 8, 1560, was buried at the east end, and the spot having been accurately ascertained, the following inscription was placed above it in 1874 by the Rev. J. W. Burgon, then vicar: "In a vault of brick, at the upper end of this choir, was buried Amy Robsart, wife of Lord Robert Dudley K.G. Sunday, 22d September, A.D. 1560;" a modern stone screen, above which is the organ, divides the nave and chancel; the former is of seven bays, with a lofty clerestory, lighted by spacious windows; both nave and chancel have open-timbered roofs: on the north side of the nave stands the canopied seat of the Vice-Chancellor and the stalls occupied by the heads of Houses, Doctors and Proctors, and the whole of the north aisle and the west end have deep galleries for the use of the undergraduates: the south porch, in the High street, was built in 1637 by Morgan Owen D.D. chaplain to Archbishop Laud, at a cost of £230, and though incongruous, with its twisted columns and rich adornments, is singularly picturesque: over the entablature of the porch is a statue of the Virgin and Child, defaced soon after its erection, and the placing it there, made one of the articles of impeachment against the archbishop, then chancellor of the University: the porch was restored in 1865; the tower and spire form one of the most striking objects in every distant view of Oxford, and the immediate view from the Radcliffe square, on the north, is majestic in the extreme, the massive severity of the tower contrasting finely with the richly decorated groups of pinnacles and other elaborate details clustering around the base of the spire; the height of which, from the basement to the vane is 189 feet 6 inches: in 1827-8 the vice-chancellor's and doctors' seats were reconstructed by the late Mr. Thomas Plowman, architect and all the monuments were removed from the pillars of the nave: the restoration of the exterior was completed in 1862, under the direction of the late Sir Gilbert Scott R.A.: St. Mary's being the University church sermons are preached here every Sunday morning and afternoon and on holy days, during term, by preachers appointed by a prescribed cycle, and here also, in Lent term, are delivered the well-known lectures founded by the Rev. John Bampton M.A. of Trinity College, who died in 1751: on the northern side of the chancel is the old Congregation House, which once formed the eastern end of the ancient church; it is of two stories, and the tower, which has a groined vault of the Decorated style, was restored in 1871 and refitted as a chapel for unattached students; the chamber above is used as a lecture room by the Vinerian Professor of law: west of the tower is Adam de Brome's chapel, containing his altar tomb, with the matrix of a brass; this chapel is also used for the purposes of the Bishop's Court and as an assembly room for Heads of Houses previous to the Sunday and other services: the font was executed in 1828 from a design by Mr. Plowman and at the expense of the Rev. Edward Hawkins D.D. late provost of Oriel; in the south aisle are several fine stained windows, chiefly memorials and a mural monument, by Flaxman to Sir William Jones; in the church are also buried Dr. John Radcliffe, founder of the library bearing his name, 1714; and John Nixon, founder of the Freeman's School, 1662; over the inner door of the tower porch is a curious brass, with rebus, to Edmund Croston, a native of Lancashire and incumbent of Biggleswade, 1507, in almuce, with St. Catherine and 16 verses; there are other brasses to Edward Chernock, of B.N.C. 1581, with 14 verses, Malina Boys, 1584 (south aisle), with effigies of herself and 12 children and 10 Latin verses; and inscriptions only to William de Hawkesworth S.T.P. 3rd Provost of Oriel, 1349, and Nicholas Quarne 1598. The register dates from the year 1599. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £40, in the gift of Oriel College, and held since 1878 by the Rev. Edmund Salisbury Ffoulkes B.D. late fellow and tutor of Jesus College. The yearly charities of this parish include £3 6s. 8d. for apprenticing; about £32 for church repairs, and about £41 for distribution.

The church of St. Mary Magdalen is situated in the street of that name, between the Corn market and St. Giles' street and is an edifice chiefly in the Decorated style, consisting of nave, north and two south aisles and a battlemented western tower, with angle turret rising above it and containing 6 bells, dated respectively, 1717, 1618, 1626 (two) and 1681, with a priest's bell. The original church was Norman, of which some remaining portions were removed in 1842, and the only complete remnant now extant is a semi-circular arch with zigzag moulding, which once separated the chancel and nave: the southernmost aisle or lady chapel is Decorated and was added to the original church in the reign of Edward II. as a chapel for the Carmelite Friars, who, by a grant of that king, occupied Beaumont Palace until 1541: the north aisle was repaired by Devorgilla, wife of John Balliol about 1280 and dedicated to St. Catherine, and was rebuilt in 1842 under the direction of the late Sir G. G. Scott R.A. and Mr. Moffat, simultaneously with the erection of the adjoining Martyr's Memorial and is now called the "Martyrs' Aisle:" in this aisle is preserved the door of the cell in the Bocardo prison where Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer were incarcerated prior to their martyrdom: there are several fine stained windows, two of which were inserted in 1834: the west window was recently filled with stained glass from a design by the Dean of Christ Church; another window in the south aisle has seven medallions of Dutch glass: the font, octagonal in shape, on a canopied pedestal, is a very elegant example of Decorated work; there are memorials to Dr. Holmes, dean of Winchester, 1805, and his widow, who died in 1846, aged 103; Richard Baylie D.D. President of St. John's College, 1667, and Elizabeth his wife, 1668. There are also brasses to William Smith M.A. fellow of Merton and physician 1580, in academic dress; and Jane (Bassett), wife of Robert Fitzherbert, of Tissington, Derbyshire, 1574; and on the north wall an inscription to Philippa Caxston, widow, 1514; impressions of brasses to Robert Abdy, priest, 1494 and Alice, wife of Richard Hamden, 1524, once in the church, are preserved in the Craven-Ord Collection, British Museum: in the north aisle is a modern brass, with effigy, to Baker Morrell, solicitor, 1854; a plate chest of curiously carved oak is preserved in the vestry: the church was restored in 1826, when the galleries were erected, and again in 1840-2, when a fine screen of marble was set up, the martyr's aisle added and two stained windows inserted; in 1875 a further restoration took place and considerable alterations were made, the western galleries being removed and the lower arch thrown open; there are now 500 sittings, all of which are free. The register dates from the year 1602. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £334, with glebe yielding £54, in the patronage of Christ Church and held since 1876 by the Rev. Henry Auber Harvey M.A. late student of Christ Church. The parochial charities include about £3 for education; £87 for apprenticing; £15 for church repairs and £42 for distribution.

The church of St. George the Martyr, built in 1849 at a cost of £5,500, as a chapel of ease to St. Mary Magdalen, and situated in George street, is a building of stone in the Decorated style, from designs by Mr. Harrison, and consists of nave and north aisle, with an open turret at the west end containing 1 bell; several of the windows, which are of very good design, are stained; the duties are performed by the vicar and curates of the parish church.

St. Michael's church, situated in Ship street, at the north end of the Corn market, is a building of mixed styles consisting of chancel, nave, south aisle, north chapel, south porch and a western tower containing 6 bells, the first two dated respectively, 1708 and 1755 and the remainder 1668; there is also a priest's bell. This church underwent a thorough restoration, in excellent taste, in the years 1853 and 1854, under the direction of the late G. E. Street esq. R.A. mainly effected by the exertions of the present vicar. The north or Lady Chapel is Perpendicular and seems to have been repaired in the reign of Richard II. whose bust, with that of his queen Isabella, terminates the exterior label of the east window; this chapel retains a good original reredos, consisting of three elegant crocketed niches: the chancel has piscina and sedilia and there are various other niches in different parts of the church: the chancel is divided from the nave by a good original screen; the south or Welsh aisle is Decorated and the porch, which is groined, and has a quatrefoiled parapet and a canopied niche on the west side of the outer door way, Perpendicular; the most ancient portion of the structure is the tower, supposed by some to be Saxon work: it is built of rubble, with quoins of finished masonry, and in the belfry storey has four two-light circular headed openings divided by balusters. Among the mural and other monuments in the church, is one inscribed to Alice (Wright) wife of Charles Harris, 1693 and another with incised portrait to Walter Doyly, 1603; and there are brasses, with effigies, to Ralph Flexney, 1578, and Catherine his wife, 1567, with 9 children; and to John, eldest son of Samuel Pendarves esq. of Cornwall, Commoner of Exeter 1617, æt. 17 and an inscription to Anna (Goodwin), wife of John Prideaux, rector of Exeter College, and regius professor of Divinity 1627, with 2 children. In the churchyard is a mural tablet to the Rev. William West Green D.D. formerly city lecturer, 1820; and memorial stones to Joseph Harpur LL.D. of Trinity College, 1821, Rev. John Calcott B.D Fellow of Lincoln College, 1864, William Edwards, undergraduate of Jesus College, 1819, and Henry Howard esq. R.A. 1847; the churchyard was lowered, and the high wall surrounding it on the south and west taken down in Jan. 1878 and it has since been re-enclosed by a dwarf stone fence, with an ornamental iron railing: a few years previous to this date the church was restored, when the battlements of the tower, added in 1500, were removed, and the nave roof renewed and covered in with somewhat gaudily coloured tiles; there are 400 sittings, all free. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1649; marriages 1653; burials 1654. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value, £100, in the gift of the Rector and fellows of Lincoln College and held, since 1849, by the Rev. Frederick Metcalfe B.D. fellow of Lincoln College and surrogate. The yearly charities of this parish include £12 for education, £6 for an exhibition, £71 for church repairs, £44 for distribution in fuel, bread and clothing, and about £49 for the general uses of the poor.

The church of St. Peter-le-Bailey, situated in New InnHall street, and erected in 1874, is a building in the Gothic style of the Fourteenth century, consisting of chancel, nave, aisles, south porch and an elegant battlemented tower with bell-turret at the east end of the south aisle: the original site of this church was at the southern end of the same street, where a church is known to have existed in the twelfth century; the tower of the ancient fabric fell in 1726, destroying the whole church, which was eventually rebuilt in 1740 in a heavy Italian style and consisted simply of a rectangular structure, with a tower at the north-west angle containing 1 bell, cast in 1792, four others having been sold to furnish funds towards its completion; this church was repaired in 1845, but on account of the increasing traffic to the railway stations, the edifice, which projected very inconveniently and somewhat dangerously into the road at the western end of Queen street, was removed in 1874; the Local Board giving to the rector the sum of £1,400 as compensation and £250 being raised for the purchase of a dwelling house attached to the church; the new church was built at a cost of £6,500, from designs by Basil Champneys esq. of London, the foundation stone being laid August 15, 1872; and the building consecrated April 27, 1874; the total length is 112 feet, width 54 feet; the tower, decorated on its eastern side with a statue of St. Peter, within an elegant niche, is 82 feet in height; the mural monuments from the old building have been re-placed in the tower of the new church and include one, with eight verses, to Margaret, wife of T. Rawlins esq. 1645, "hurt by her husband's sword, but not his will;" and there is a brass to Sir William Loughborough, alias Northern, mayor of Oxford at the coronation of Richard II. ob. 1383, and Margaret his wife, renovated by the citizens in 1667, with others to John Sprunt, mayor, with mutilated effigy, 1419; a lady, c. 1640; a civilian (perhaps George Box) and wife, c. 1640, with kneeling effigies; and an inscription to William Parker LL.B. 1510. The graveyard of the old church, which extended north of it, has been re-laid, planted with shrubs and enclosed with a wall and iron railing. The register dates from the year 1585. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £300 with residence, in the gift of trustees and held since 1878 by the Rev. Francis James Chavasse M.A. of Corpus Christi college. The parochial charities include about £63 a year for apprenticing; £4 for church repairs; £79 applied in payments of annuities of £10 each to aged men and women; and about £14 for distribution.

St. Peter's-in-the-East, one of the oldest churches in the kingdom, is situated in Queen's lane, north of St. Edmund Hall and opposite to the east front of Queen's College; it consists of chancel, with north or lady chapel, nave, north aisle, south porch and a western tower containing 6 bells, five of which were cast in 1700, and the 2nd in 1753, there is also a priest's bell dated 1777; of the original Norman church many very rich and interesting portions remain: the chancel, assumed to be earlier than the Norman portion of the church of St. Cross Hospital, at Winchester, retains a great part of its elaborate groined roof, with the shafts supporting it, as well as two windows, enriched with zigzag mouldings: the lady chapel, standing at right angles to it, was built about 1240, by St. Edmund of Abingdon and anciently served as the chapel of St. Edmund Hall: in the north window, inserted by Vincent Wyking, vicar, in 1433, are some fragments of old stained glass; the eastern lancets were filled with stained glass in 1839: the nave is divided from its aisle by an arcade of three arches, on round, foliaged columns and is lighted by large Perpendicular windows, inserted in 1501, one being a memorial window to the Rev. W. Adams, author of "The Shadow of the Cross," who was for a short time vicar here, and is buried at Bonchurch, Isle of Wight: on the south side is a spacious groined porch, with parvise and quatrefoiled parapet; the inner doorway is an elaborate Norman work and has the remains of a stoup on the east side; a fragment of the ancient polygonal font is built into the west window of the porch; at the west end is an organ gallery; the tower, placed at the west end of the north aisle, is remarkable for the singularity of its construction, the walls sloping gradually inwards from the base to the summit, which terminates in a quatrefoiled parapet: beneath the chancel and approached from the outside by a flight of steps, through a massive buttress on the south side is a very early Norman crypt, scarcely inferior in interest to that of Canterbury cathedral; in dimension it is 36 feet by nearly 21 feet and 10 feet in height and is divided into a centre and aisles by eight pillars, with carved capitals, supporting a vaulted roof: many persons of local distinction and of eminence in the literary world are buried within this church, the former including Sir Richard Atkinson, knight, 1574, five times mayor of Oxford, to whom there is a fine altar tomb of Petworth marble in the lady chapel, with brasses of himself, two wives and eleven children: in the churchyard is a table tomb to the celebrated antiquary, Thomas Hearne, ob. 1735; there are other memorials to Dillenius, Sherardian Professor of Botany; Dr. Gerard Langbaine, Provost of Queen's, 1657; Dr. Arthur Charlett, master of University; Philip Randall M.A. principal of Hart Hall, 1599; and Dr. Josiah Pullen, principal of Magdalen Hall; and brasses to William Robertson, "pincerna" (butler), of Queen's College, 1487, and Jane, his wife; Simon Parrett gent. M.A. fellow of Magdalen College, and twice proctor, 1584, and his wife Elizabeth, 1572, with nineteen children; Richard Ratcliffe M.D. 1599, and wife; and John Chyttock, citizen and draper of London; this last is a palimpsest brass, the reverse being incised to Richard Hawnsard esq. of Lincoln's Inn, with verse inscription in Latin. There are 400 sittings of which 390 are free. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1563; marriages, 1670. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £210 with residence, in the gift of Merton College, and held since 1867 by the Rev. John Richard King M.A. formerly fellow of that college, and surrogate. The yearly charities of this parish include about £3 for apprenticing; £1 for clergy; £46 for church repairs; and about £37 for distribution.

The church of St. Thomas the Martyr is situated a little southward of the Witney road, at the western extremity of the city and close to the railway stations and consists of chancel, nave, north aisle, south porch and a battlemented western tower, with buttresses at the angles and an embattled turret on the north side, rising above the parapet and contains 6 bells, dated respectively 1733, 1717, 1706 (two) and 1806 (two): the church was founded in 1141, by the canons of Oseney, partly for the use of the parishioners of the ancient church of St. George, within the precincts of the castle, then besieged by King Stephen: the chancel is Early English, the priest's door having its original ironwork still intact; the nave is in part Perpendicular, with an aisle on the north side in the Decorated style, added in 1847: the porch has the date 1621, with the arms of Robert Burton B.D. of Christ Church, then vicar, but chiefly known as the compiler of a volume of Latin quotations, called "The Anatomy of Melancholy:" the tower is Perpendicular: there are eleven stained windows and in the chancel a monument to the five maiden daughters of Anthony Kendal: on the exterior east end is a mural tablet to Joan, daughter of William and Joan Westbury, 1683, and two other daughters, 1686-7; outside the north wall of the chancel is an altar tomb, with arms, to Timothy Bourne, of Rewley, in this parish, 1732, and Martha his wife, daughter of Mr. John Wilcox, of Oxford, J.P. and twice mayor: the church is about 100 feet in length and has 500 sittings, all of which are free; until 1847, when the level of the floor was raised, the interior was frequently flooded, wedding parties and funerals being sometimes conveyed to the church in punts and the churchyard, in very wet seasons, is still liable to be submerged. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1655; marriages and burials, 1667. The living is a vicarage, yearly value £220, in the gift of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, and held since 1842 by the Rev. Thomas Chamberlain M.A. senior student and hon. canon of Christ Church; the Rev. Hubert Francis Jones M.A. of Jesus College is curate. Oseney Abbey and Rewley Abbey were both situated in the parish of St. Thomas. The parochial charities include Kendall and Harris's charities of about £58 for education, of which £20 is assigned to the parish of St. Paul; £6 for sermons; £20 for church purposes; £48 for pensioners; and about £84 for distribution in bread and fuel, one-third of which is given to St. Paul's parish.

The following are ecclesiastical parishes only.

Holy Trinity was formed in 1844 out of the civil parish of St. Ebbe. The church, built in 1845, is a structure in the Early English style, from designs by Mr. Underwood, architect and was erected at a cost of about £3,400 raised by subscriptions; it was consecrated on the 14th October, 1845, and consists of chancel, nave, aisles and a bell turret; there are 597 sittings, 384 being free. The register dates from the year 1845. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £170, in the gift of the Rev. E. P. Hathaway and held since 1877 by the Rev. Harry George Grey M.A. of Wadham College.

St. Barnabas is an ecclesiastical parish formed in 1870 from the parishes of St. Giles and St. Thomas: the church, situated in Cardigan street, Jericho, is an edifice of concrete, built from the designs of A. W. Blomfield esq. M.A. after the model of the church of St. Torcello, Venice, and consists of chancel, with apse, clerestoried nave, aisles, western baptistery and a lofty campanile on the south side, added in 1872 and containing 1 bell; it is built on a site given by Messrs. G. and W. Ward, the total cost, including the campanile and interior decorations, being about £8,000, the whole of which was defrayed by the munificence of T. Combe esq. M.A. one of the delegates of the University Press: the foundation stone was laid April 26, 1868, and the church consecrated by the late Bishop Wilberforce, October 19, 1869: the chancel is formed by a raised platform of stone at the eastern end of the nave, fenced with stone, and metal screen-work, with western gates; the apse, with its semi-dome, is effectively decorated in gold and colours and above the communion table rises a baldachino of elaborate workmanship; pendent from the roof, in front of the chancel, is a metal cross of rich open work, gilded, and set with five brilliants: in the capitals of some of the pillars are introduced portraits of the founder, Bishop Wilberforce, the Rev. Montague H. Noel, vicar, the late Rev. Alfred Hackman, and the architect: the church will seat 1,000 persons, all seats being free: and is endowed with £3,000, of which £1,000 has been provided by Convocation out of the funds of the Clarendon Press (that institution being situated in the Jericho district), on condition that the Ecclesiastical Commissioners meet the grant with an equal sum. The register dates from the year 1870. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £176, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1869 by the Rev. Montague Henry Noel M.A. of Christ Church

St. Frideswide's is an ecclesiastical parish, formed in 1872 from the parish of St Thomas the Martyr: the church, situated at Oseney Town, on the south side of the Botley road, is a stone edifice in the Early English style, erected at a cost of £4,000, from designs by S. S. Teulon esq. of London, consisting of apsidal chancel, nave, shallow transepts, north porch and with an incomplete central tower: the chancel is lighted by five windows, forming an interior arcade, the central window being stained; the nave has an open-timbered roof and windows in couplets; the west end being lighted by two windows with a circular light above: the tower, at present covered in with a flat polygonal roof, is intended eventually to reach a height of 54 feet, with a spire 40 feet high: the foundation stone was laid 13th December, 1870, and the church opened in 1872: it will seat 370 persons, all sittings being free. The register dates from the year 1872. The living is a vicarage, yearly value £264, in the gift of Christ Church and held since 1872 by the Rev. George Lynch Kemp, of Hertford College, who has a vicarage house adjoining, built in 1876.

St. Paul's is an ecclesiastical parish formed in 1837 out of the parishes of St. Giles and St. Thomas. The church, an edifice in the Greek Classic style, with a portico of the Ionic order, is situated in Walton street and was erected in 1836, on a site given by the Radcliffe trustees, under the direction of the late Mr. H. J. Underwood, of Oxford; the cost was defrayed by public subscription, the delegates of the University Press giving £500 towards the building fund and £1000 towards the endowment: the church has 1 bell and sittings for 650 persons, all of which are free. The register dates from the year 1837. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £190, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford, and held since 1871 by the Rev. William Bottomley Duggan M.A. of Lincoln College. This parish receives £20 a year from the charities of St. Thomas's parish for educational purposes; and also one third share of the amount bequeathed to that parish for distribution in kind.

The ecclesiastical parish of SS. Philip and James was formed in 1863. The church, situated in the Woodstock road, is a building of stone, in a modified form of the Early Decorated style, from designs by the late J. E. Street esq. R.A. consisting of chancel with polygonal apse, clerestoried nave, shallow aisles, south porch and a central tower with a broach spire, added in 1866, and containing 1 bell: the chancel has a groined roof and stained windows: the nave, unusually wide, is of six bays and separated from the aisles by arcades of pointed arches, on short circular columns of polished granite, with foliaged capitals: the roof is waggon-headed, boarded in panels and highly coloured: there are 700 sittings, all of which are free. The register dates from the year 1863. The living is a vicarage, in the gift of St. John's College, net yearly value £80, with allowance for residence, and held since 1872 by the Rev. Edward Conduitt Dermer M.A. fellow of St. John's College, Oxford, and Diocesan Inspector of Schools.

St. Nicholas' School Church, Hythe Bridge street, was erected in 1869, at a cost of £400 by Ald. W. Ward and others, to supply the place of the old Floating Chapel, which had for many years been the recognised place of worship for watermen and others employed on the river and canal.

The Catholic church of St. Aloysius, situated in the Woodstock road, is a lofty structure in the Transition style, consisting of apsidal chancel, with lateral chapels, nave, south chapel and baptistery with vestries and confessionals, and was erected from the designs of Messrs. Hansom and Son, of London, the cost being defrayed from a sum of £7,000, bequeathed under the will of the late Baroness Weld: the apse is surrounded by a double arcaded reredos of canopied niches, enclosing statues, above which is a cornice of demi-angels, surmounted by a cresting; in front of this, but separated from it, stands the altar, with a richly canopied expositorium of alabaster rising above it and approached from behind by stairways on either side: the nave is of six bays, with narrow aisles and a lofty arcaded clerestory, lighted by coupled windows rising to the roof, which is coved and ribbed in wood; the west end is crossed by a spacious gallery, over which is a fine rotary window; in the apse are four stained windows; eastward, and forming a portion of the street at this point, is the Presbytery, erected in 1878: the church is attached to the Jesuit order, the present superior being the Rev. J. B. Parkinson M.A. of Queen's College, Cambridge. The old Catholic chapel, with presbytery, is situated at the extreme east end of St. Clement's.

The Wesley Memorial chapel, erected in New-Inn-Hall street-west in 1877–8, is a spacious and ornate structure in the Decorated style and consists of a nave with aisles, and a tower, 20 feet square, at the north-east angle, surmounted by an octagonal spire, the whole rising to a height of 130 feet; the building, designed by Mr. Charles Bell A.R.I.B.A. of London, is 70 feet long, 48 feet wide and 40 feet high and is surrounded on three sides by galleries, with open arcaded fronts, supported on columns of polished granite, with carved capitals, seating altogether nearly 900 persons: the elaborately traceried east window is filled with stained glass, illustrative of the various fruits and flowers of Holy Scripture, as a memorial to the late Rev. George Maunder, resident minister here during the erection of the chapel: on the south side is another stained window, with figures of the cardinal virtues, erected by Mr. J. R. Symm of Oxford, in memory of his only daughter, the late Mrs. Joseph Lawton; at the back is a vestry, ministers' room and class rooms, all of which are large and well appointed; the total cost was about £9,000: the new building almost entirely covers the site formerly occupied by the minister's and chapel keeper's houses, with their adjacent gardens and the broad gravelled walk leading to the former chapel, an edifice in the Italian style, opened in 1817, and still remaining, the ground floor of which is now converted into class rooms for the purposes of the Wesleyan Day School, and the upper storey into a large assembly room for public meetings; its southern and western sides are partly enclosed by a burial ground, containing a considerable number of tombs, mural tablets and inscribed stones. The first Wesleyan chapel built in Oxford stood on the opposite side of the street, somewhat higher up, adjoining the remains of St. Mary's College, and was erected in 1781; here John Wesley preached on various occasions. There are other Wesleyan chapels in Cranham street, St. Paul's, and in St. Clement's.

The Congregational chapel, George street, was erected in 1832, from plans by Mr. Greenshields: it has a front elevation of stone, designed to imitate the Early English style, and was considerably improved in 1868 by the addition of porches and various interior alterations, under the direction of Mr. F. Codd, of Oxford; beneath the chapel is a spacious schoolroom.

The Congregational chapel, Cowley road, is a building of brick and stone, in a modified style of Norman, erected in 1869, from designs by Mr. S. Merrick, of Bradford-on-Avon: the total cost, inclusive of internal fittings, was £1,200, and it will seat about 300 persons.

The Baptist chapel, New road, St. Peter Le Bailey, was first built in 1720, rebuilt in 1780, enlarged in 1798 and 1819, and greatly improved by the construction of a new and more lofty roof in 1864: the society was first founded in Ship street in 1618, and has registers of births and burials dating from 1784.

The Baptist chapel, Commercial road, St. Ebbe's, was erected in 1832, at a cost of £4,000, by the Rev. H. Bulteel, fellow and tutor of Exeter College, who seceded from the Church of England in 1831, and was then known as "Adullam Chapel;" in 1868 it was purchased for £1,500 by a Baptist Congregation formed in 1866, at the Chequers' meeting room, and the building was re-opened in 1869 by the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon: there are Baptist meeting rooms in Alfred street, St. Giles'; King street, St. Paul's; and at Osney Town.

The chapel of the United Methodist Free Church, in New Inn Hall street east, was erected in 1870–1, from plans by Mr. J. C. Curtis, of Oxford, at a cost of £2,000, and has a stone frontage in the Italian style; in the basement is a spacious schoolroom.

The Primitive Methodist chapel, in Pembroke street, St. Clement's, also designed by Mr. Curtis, was opened in May, 1875, and cost about £1,600.

The Brethren, usually called "Plymouth Brethren," have a chapel or meeting room in New-Inn-Hall-street-west, erected in 1877 by Mr. H. Parks, at a cost, including site, of £1,270.

There is also a Scotch Presbyterian church in Nelson street, St. Barnabas, and a Jews' synagogue.

There are four cemeteries. That of St. Cross has already been mentioned in connection with Holywell church. St. Mary's, Osney Town, adjoining the Great Western railway, serves for the parishes of St. Aldate, St. Ebbe, St. Peter le Bailey and St. Thomas; it is 4 acres in extent and has one mortuary chapel, but unfortunately lies low and is sometimes flooded. St. Sepulchre's, Walton street, containing 3 acres, has one mortuary chapel, and is the place of interment for the parishes of St. Giles, St. Paul, St. Barnabas, St. Michael, St. Mary Magdalen, and St. Martin. The cemetery of St. John the Evangelist, Cowley road, was formed in 1875, by the munificence of the Rev. R. M. Benson; it comprises about 3 acres, enclosed in 1877, and is used in connection with the new adjacent church of the same name.

Dr. Wall's charity of £84 a year is bestowed in pensions upon four poor widows; and Hodgkins's charity of £27 yearly is similarly appropriated. The remaining city charities, exclusive of such as are purely parochial, include a yearly sum of £182 for apprenticing; £30 for organ repairs; £142 for distribution in bread, fuel, and clothing; £601 for distribution in money and about £300 for loans without interest. These further include Hughes's bequest of £150 yearly, for the benefit of fifteen Dissenting societies in the counties of Oxon, Berks and Warwick; and Buswell's charity of about £12 yearly, bequeathed in 1829 for the education of Dissenters.

Stone's hospital or alms houses, situated on the south side of St. Clement's, were erected in 1700, under the will of the Rev. W. Stone, principal of New Inn Hall, dated May 12th, 1685; the hospital consists of a long range of houses in a single block, substantially built of stone with gardens in front, and has an income of about £208 yearly, mostly derived from land. The almspeople, consisting of eight poor widows, receive £20 10s. yearly, with coals, and the use of a garden in the rear. Cutler Boulter's charity of about £400 yearly, derived from 160 acres of land and invested funds, maintains six almshouses with a medical dispensary attached, for as many poor men, chosen from specified places in the counties of Oxford, Lincoln, York, Hants, Cambridge and Kent, each receiving 8s. weekly; and medical assistance is also afforded to the poor generally. The almshouses, situated on the north side of St. Clement's, are neat buildings, surrounding three sides of a small court, retired from the street and enclosed by an iron railing. Tawney's almshouses, forming Nos. 2 and 3 Fisher row, St. Thomas', have an annual income of £182 and are for six poor persons, each of whom receives £20 a year. Parsons' almshouses, situated in a retired court yard in Grove street, are for eight persons and have a yearly income of about £142. Richard Wootten's charity of £515 9s. 6d. yearly, bequeathed in 1866–7, is for fourteen pensioners, each of whom receives 14s. per week.

A School Board of eight members, representing both the University and City, was formed in 1871.

The principal schools are the Cathedral Grammar school, Magdalen College school, the City of Oxford High school for boys, and St. Edward's school, Summertown; also establishments for the higher education of girls, besides National schools in connection with all the churches.

Christ Church Cathedral School, founded in 1546, is primarily intended for the education of the boys composing the Cathedral choir, but the school has for many years been practically open to the public, and the head master receives private boarders. New buildings, comprising a schoolroom and class room, have within the last few years been erected on the south side of the road leading from St. Aldates, through the college precincts, into the Broad Walk, and attached to these is a good play ground. There are 8 choristers on the foundation, who are educated, boarded and lodged free of expense, and 8 probationers, who, if approved, succeed to choristerships as vacancies occur: both choristers and probationers reside in the choir house, with the head master, who also receives other boarders, and the school is open to day boys. The course of instruction includes the usual range of English subjects, classics, mathematics, modern languages, drawing and music, and is generally such as to prepare boys for entrance into the larger public schools or the University, where the school has now numerous representatives. Governors, the Dean and Chapter of Church Church

Magdalen College School, like that of the Cathedral, is also properly a choir school for the college choristers, founded in 1480, but this exclusive character has long since been abandoned, and in recent years the school has won for itself a leading position among public schools of the first grade. The school buildings lie westward of the college and include a large and lofty schoolroom in the Perpendicular style, erected in 1849-51, from designs by J. C. Buckler and Sons, architects, with a bell-turret on the north side, and adjacent class rooms, built about 1868, under the direction of Mr. C. Buckeridge, architect, of Oxford. On the walls of the schoolroom are portraits of Cardinal Wolsey, Camden, the antiquarian, Dr. Routh, late president of the college, and others. Northward extends a spacious playground, bounded on two sides by Magdalen grove, and on the west by Long Wall street, on the opposite side of which is the scholars' entrance to the head master's boarding house, together with a private chapel for the use of the boarders. The private residence of the head master faces the High street, and is distinguished by the arms of the college placed over the entrance. One exhibition, tenable at the University, has been founded by the present head master. The sixteen choristerships and the house exhibitions are tenable only at the school, which is at present conducted under a scheme of the college, framed in 1875, and a statute made by the Universities' Commission in 1872: the present number of boys is 65, of whom 35 are boarders and 30 day boys. Among the distingnished alumni may be mentioned William Cowper, Dean of Christ Church, and successively Bishop of Lincoln and Winchester 1570-95; William Camden, herald and antiquary, 1551-1623; Thomas Pierce, afterwards president of the college; Thomas Yalden D.D. the poet, 1671-1736; and more recently, the Rev. E. L. Hicks M.A. author of "Greek Inscriptions," &c. and J. R. Green M.A. the historian. The list of head masters includes John Stokesley, Bishop of London, 1530-40; Cardinal Wolsey and Thomas Smith D.D. historian, 1638-1710.

The City of Oxford High School for Boys, situated in George street, is a very handsome building in the revived Queen Anne style, erected in 1878, at a cost of £10,000, from the designs of T. G. Jackson esq. M.A. fellow of Wadham College, and the facade in particular is generally regarded as a most successful reproduction of the quaint peculiarities of this style; the projecting portico bears the arms of the city, and the front has a clock given by Mr. Alderman Hughes: the buildings lie somewhat retired from the street and separated from it by an open courtyard, fenced in with stone piers connected by iron railings extending along the whole frontage. The school was founded January 30th, 1878, in accordance with a scheme sanctioned by the Lords of the Treasury in that year, and the foundation stone was laid by Prince Leopold, April 13th, 1881: the funds were provided partly by the Corporation (who gave £4,000 and the site, valued at £4,000), by the University in its corporate capacity, by several colleges and by citizens and members of the University alike: the building consists of two storys, connected by staircases and has four class-rooms and a fine large hall: the playground behind the school is nearly three quarters of an acre and is supplied with a covered shed for the boys in wet weather, with a fives' court, and a gravelled tennis court. Attached to the school are Exhibitions to the University, tenable for 3 years; one given by the late Professor Green, a governor and promoter of the school; another by Mr. Claud Montefiore, of Balliol College, in memory of his brother, Mr. Leonard Montefiore; and a third is being raised as a memorial to the late Professor Green. Scholarships are awarded yearly to boys under 15, who are already in the school; others to boys under 12, who have been educated at the Public Elementary schools in Oxford, but the scholarships are tenable only at this school, their number being variable, and depending on subscriptions: up to the present time six have been given; Balliol, Queen's, All Souls', Oriel and Brasenose colleges are contributors and there are also many private subscribers. The head-master, by permission of the Governing Body, receives boarders. The school is managed by a body of 20 governors, of whom 7 represent the Town Council, 4 are ex officio; 3 nominated; and 6 co-optative.

St. Stephen's House, Park street, was opened in October 1876, as a place of residence and training for candidates for holy orders and especially for such as intend to engage in foreign mission work, the course of study being varied according to the standing and intentions of the students, all of whom are members of the university, being either (a) graduates preparing for holy orders, whether at home or abroad, or (b) undergraduates, who, if purposing to undertake home work, do not enter until the last term of their university course, but if intending to go out as missionaries may enter at any period; arrangements have also been made for the reception of missionaries on leave of absence and not necessarily members of the university. There is a chapel attached to the house, in which services are held daily. The fees for board, lodging and tuition are: for graduates, for the 30 weeks' residence required in the year, £81; for undergraduates, £2 a week. During the year 1882, there were 12 students in residence and since the house was first opened 40 students have been trained in it. The institution is under the patronage of the Lord Bishop of the Diocese and is managed by a committee of seven persons, chiefly clergy; Rev. John Octavius Johnston M.A. principal.

Wycliffe Hall, situated in St. Giles' road east, is a building of brick in a semi-Byzantine style, erected in 1877-8 and considerably enlarged in 1881, under the direction of Messrs. Wilkinson & Moore, architects, of Oxford. This institution, founded in 1877, is designed as a place of study for graduates who feel the need of special preparation for holy orders, or who wish for a quiet home whilst attending divinity lectures and has the general approval of the Archbishop of Canterbury and of the Regius Professor of Divinity. The course of study is mainly Biblical, special attention being directed to the requirements of the Bishops and to the scheme for the "preliminary examination of candidates for holy orders." The study of Hebrew is encouraged and introductory lectures are given on Christian Evidences, the Prayer Book and Pastoral work, with exercises in reading and preaching. The Hall is conducted on the principles set forth in the VIth Article of the Church of England; the reverent and intelligent study of Scripture, as a whole, being regarded as the basis of all sound doctrine and as a preservative against narrowness of thought and exclusiveness of sympathy. Students may be either resident or non-resident; each resident student has two rooms, but all meals are in common. The whole expense of rooms, board and lectures is £21 a term. Those who wish to stay up during part of the vacation can do so. There are two exhibitions, reducing the cost of residence nearly a half, available for men who could not otherwise give an additional year to study. The Hall is under the management of a Council, of which the Dean of Canterbury is chairman, the Archbishop of Canterbury being visitor; Rev. R.B. Girdlestone M.A. hon. canon of Ch. Ch. principal; Rev. F. Baylis B.A. vice-principal.

Somerville Hall, St. Giles', is an institution founded in October 1879, by an Association formed in Oxford under the Companies' Acts of 1862 and 1867, for promoting the higher education of women, and is intended for the reception of students coming from a distance to attend the lectures of the Association; the existing buildings are adapted for 18 students, but a new south-east wing, erected in 1882 from plans furnished by T. Graham Jackson esq. M.A. at an estimated cost of £2,500, provides room for 12 additional students, besides other apartments. The course of study is such as to qualify for the Higher Oxford Local Examinations, and the council also undertake to arrange for the instruction in Holy Scripture of those who desire it, and for private tuition in other subjects, if necessary: the charge for board and lodging is 20 guineas per term of 8 weeks, the terms corresponding generally with those of University residence; lecture fees are paid to the Association and will probably amount to about £15 a year. The Hall has one scholarship of £35 a year for three years, given annually by the Clothworker's Company; a second of £25 a year for two years, given by Mr. Wait, late M.P. for Gloucester; an open scholarship of £30 a year, given by the Association; and an Exhibition of £50 for two years presented anonymously. Scholarships and Exhibitions from the London University, Birmingham and Bradford are also held by students now resident. The Hall is undenominational in principle and care is taken in the conduct of it to place members of different religious denominations on the same footing. Prayers are read daily in the house, and on Sundays the students are expected, as a rule, to attend a place of worship chosen by themselves or their parents. No student is admitted under the age of 17. For the purposes of physical training students have the use of the Oxford Gymnasium one morning in the week and lawn tennis may be played in the extensive grounds attached to the Hall. The Council of the Association for 1882-3 consists of 21 persons, including two representatives of the Clothworkers' Company; Rev. J. Percival, President of Trinity College, president; Hon. Mrs. Vernon Harcourt, Cowley Grange, Oxford, hon. sec.

Lady Margaret Hall, 21 Norham gardens, Park town, was founded in 1879 for the higher education of women on the principles of the Church of England and is under the management of a committee: the students, now 18 in number, are resident and the fees are, for board, £75, and for tuition, £15 per annum: there is no resident staff of teachers, but the course of study is under the direction of a lady principal, assisted by public lecturers from the University: the sessions correspond for the most part to the University terms: an addition to the house, after designs by Mr. Basil Champneys, enables the committee to receive eighteen students instead of twelve and a further addition is contemplated, which will accommodate another six or eight. A gymnasium is in the house and both grass and winter lawn-tennis courts in the grounds. Two exhibitions will be offered the second week in October—one of £35 a year for two years, to those in need of assistance; and one of £25 for three years, with no such condition attached.

The High School for Girls, situated a little north of St. Giles' church, in St. Giles' road east, is a building of moulded brickwork in the revived Queen Anne style and was erected in 1879 at a cost of £8,000, from designs by T. G. Jackson esq. M.A. The school was first opened in November 1875, under the auspices of the Girls' Public Day School Company, Limited and transferred to the new premises in September 1880: these, intended for day scholars only, are arranged for 250 pupils; the number now in attendance being about 200, but there are several connected boarding houses. The school system is specially adapted to meet and correct the defects pointed out in the report of the Schools Inquiry Commission, and the course of instruction includes religious knowledge, the usual English subjects, Latin, foreign languages, mathematics, physical science, social economy, drawing, class singing and harmony, gymnastic exercises and needlework: three scholarships, in the form of entire remission of school fees, are awarded by examination. For the purposes of physical training, a class is held at the Oxford Gymnasium, under the direction of Mr. A. Maclaren, and there is also daily drill in the school, which has attached a fine tennis court and playground and a preparatory department for pupils under 7 years of age. The terminal fees vary from 3 to 5 guineas a term accordfng to age, with an entrance fee of one guinea; in the preparatory department, the terminal fee is two guineas and there is no entrance fee. The school is subjected to an annual inspection and examination by the Oxford and Cambridge Schools' Examination Board and is governed in accordance with the provisions of the constitution and current regulations of the Company.

The Oxford Diocesan Female Training College, 11 Banbury road, Oxford, was founded in 1873, for the training of schoolmistresses for elementary schools under government inspection, and there are now 27 resident students: the course of instruction is that prescribed in the code of regulations issued by the Education Department and the fees amount to £10 per annum, payable at the beginning of each year: the sessions extend from January 25th to June 30th, with 10 days vacation at Easter and from August 18th to December 12th; the college is supported by government grants, students' fees, subscriptions from the Diocesan Board of Education and the National Society, and by individual contributions: the management is in the hands of a committee of 17 persons, of which the Bishop of Oxford is chairman: all communications should be addressed to the Rev. H. D. de Brisay M.A. chaplain, 11 Bradmore road, Oxford.

The Convent of the Society of the Holy and Undivided Trinity, St. Giles' road west, a building of stone, in the Early English style, erected in 1866-8, patron Earl Beauchamp, was founded in December, 1849, by Miss Marian Rebecca Hughes (the present Mother Superior), with the authority of Bishop Wilberforce, for works of mercy in the diocese of Oxford: the foundation stone of the convent, erected from designs by the late Charles Buckeridge esq. was laid by the Bishop in 1865, the funds for building being supplied by the sisters, who, on the 25th of March, 1868, removed from their first residence in St. John street to the new premises. The statutes of the Society, arranged with the assistance of Dr. Pusey, were accepted by the Bishop, as visitor, 21st of November, 1861, when the seal of the diocese was affixed and the statutes were signed by the Bishop, the visitors and the trustees. The objects of the Society are to pray for the increase and preservation of the true faith, to work both among rich and poor, under the direction of the parish clergy, and to teach young girls of different classes of society. For this purpose have been founded—(1) A school for young ladies, consisting of 20 boarders and a few day pupils; fee for boarders from 35 to 45 guineas a year, with extra fees for accomplishments: this school is examined once a year under the regulations of the Oxford University Delegates for Local Examinations and by the Diocesan examiner in religious knowledge. Various prizes are awarded by the Society: and any profits from the school go to the support of the (2) Orphanage, which was begun in 1852, chiefly for Oxford children, who are in most cases taken free; for others the sum of £13 a year is charged; they are taught and trained with a view to their becoming superior household servants, and are examined once a year by the Diocesan examiner, and when old enough to go to service receive a convenient outfit. There is (3) a day school for the middle classes carried on in a separate building at the end of the garden: this school is taught by sisters holding certificates, and is examined yearly both by H.M. inspector and by the Diocesan examiner, and the infant department (which is a Kindergarten) is examined by a lady appointed by the Froebel Society; the fee is 7s. a quarter and at present there are 150 children on the register. There are in addition (4) Sunday classes for the poor and middle class; (5) evening classes for young women in business; and (6) a confraternity for young women, meetings being held twice a month.

The Town Hall, situated at the north end of St. Aldate's street, is a building of two stories, in the Italian style and forms an elongated parallelogram, relieved in front by a slightly projecting centre, with cornice and pediment; it was erected chiefly at the expense of Thomas Rowney esq. formerly alderman, high steward and M.P. for the city of Oxford, who, in 1751, agreed to take down and rebuild the former hall, receiving in aid the old materials and a sum of £1,300 already contributed for the work, which was finished June 11th, 1752. The basement is rusticated and contains the Town Clerk's Office and the Oxford Free Public Library and Reading Room, opened 1st June, 1854; this library has now about 3,000 volumes in the lending department and 4,000 in the reference department, and the reading room is amply supplied with all the principal papers and literature of the day. The hall itself, 135 feet in length, but inconveniently narrow, occupies the greater part of the upper story; placed within a pedimented niche in the centre of the front is a full-sized statue in Caen stone, of Mr. Rowney, presented in November, 1844, by Alderman Charles Tawney. Adjoining the Town Hall is the Council Chamber, in which are portraits of Queen Anne, William III. John, first Duke of Marlborough; George, third Duke of Marlborough, by Gainsborough; James, Earl of Abingdon, by Dahl; Sir Thomas White; Dr. Wall; Alderman Nixon, 1638, and Joan, his wife; Zachary Bogan; Alderman Wise; Thomas Rowney esq.; Alderman Fletcher; Sir William Elias Taunton, town clerk; Richard Hawkins, alderman, 1638; and other benefactors to the city: the city mace, of silver gilt, and about 5ft. in height, was made in 1668, during the mayoralty of John Lamb, and there are two smaller maces of silver. In the Assembly Room is an ancient carving in oak of the city arms, with the date 1577, the only remaining relic of the old Town Hall, formerly the Domus Conversorum, or "Jewish House of Converts," which the burgesses acquired in the reign of Henry III.; this building stood on the site of the present Hall, and consisted of a rectangular structure of two stories, with a low battlemented tower at its south end; in rear of the present Town Hall is an open court, the north side of which is occupied by municipal buildings; on the south side are the old premises of Nixon's school, built in 1658, with quaint projecting windows, and the city arms over the entrance; and on the east is the Oxford Corn Exchange, a spacious and lofty edifice of brick, 100 feet long by 50 feet wide, surrounded within by a wide gallery, and lighted by a clerestory and glazed roof; it was erected in 1863, and both site and building belong to the corporation, the latter being let for the use of the Corn Exchange Company, every Saturday, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. for a term of 31 years, at a rental of £125 per annum; the rents and fees for admission on Saturday are taken by the company, but the corporation have the control and profits at all other times. Petty sessions are held on Tuesdays and Fridays at eleven o'clock in the Town Hall, at which the Mayor and city magistrates preside; the quarterly courts of session are presided over by the Recorder.

The Police Station, formerly at Carfax, is now situated on the south side of the High street, in rear of the main line of houses, and is reached from the street by a narrow passage: the premises consist in part of an old house in the Elizabethan style, bearing date 1611 and 1637; and occupying the site of an ancient Academical foundation, called "Kempe Hall"; up to January 1, 1870, the University and City police were distinct bodies, each with peculiar powers of remote origin; but they have since been amalgamated, and the united force, with one superintendent, two inspectors and four sergeants, is under the management of a committee of 15 members, five of whom, as representing the University, are elected by Convocation and 10 by the Town Council; the station has sleeping room for 14 men.

The County Police Station is in the New road, west of the Castle Mount, and adjoining the parish schools of St. Peter-le-Bailey.

The Probate Court, situated in the New road, is a building of stone in the Gothic style, and was erected in 1864; immediately opposite and adjoining the entrance to the Castle is the Diocesan registry.

The Oxford Volunteer Fire Brigade, established in 1870, chiefly by the efforts of Mr. Joseph Round, mayor 1874-5, and supported by voluntary contributions, consists of one superintendent and 45 members; the principal station is in New Inn Hall street, where are kept one steam and three manual engines, together with the usual appliances; a branch station is now (1882) being established in the Cowley road.

The County Hall and Assize Courts, erected in 1841, at a cost of £15,000, are in the New road, and occupy in part the site of the great hall and northern walls of Oxford castle; they are massively built of stone in the Castellated style, the Hall being in the centre with a court on either side; there is also a grand jury room, with retiring and consulting rooms and offices; in the County Magistrates' Court hang two fine portraits of W. H. Ashhurst esq. for 24 years chairman of quarter sessions, who died June 3, 1846; and the Right Hon. Joseph Warner Henley J.P., D.L. and M.P. for Oxfordshire from 1841 to 1878; in rear of the courts is a spacious courtyard, containing the offices of the Clerk of the Peace, south of which stands

Her Majesty's Prison, erected in 1805, at a cost of about £19,000, from designs by Mr. Blackburn, architect; the buildings are placed immediately within the southern precincts of the castle, and have incorporated with them some portion of the ancient fortress, with which the severe style adopted by the architect very well accords; at the extreme south-west corner stands the famous Saxon tower, generally known as "Maud's tower," and once forming the chief of a series of six placed at different angles of the castle wall; it appears to have existed before the time of Robert D'Oiley, and to have been by him converted into a campanile for the church of St. George within the Castle; the walls are nearly 10 feet in thickness, converging towards the top; and the original entrance was by a flight of steps from the outside; there is a round turret at the south-east angle, and the parapet is crenellated; about 70 feet from this tower is a small but highly interesting Saxon crypt, 20 feet square, with a vaulted roof, supported on dwarf columns, with elongated and singularly carved capitals; it appears originally to have been very nearly under the east end of St. George's church, though not agreeing in its dimensions with that building, but on the erection of the new prison the whole was carefully shifted, and rebuilt at a distance of 1½ feet from its proper site; forming part of the western boundary of the castle is the great mount, raised in the ninth century for the double purpose of defence and observation; the huge decagon keep raised upon its summit by Robert D'Oiley has disappeared, but the ancient vaulted well room in the centre of the mount, built in the reign of Henry II. still exists, and is reached, as of old, by a vaulted stairway from the outside; the well itself is 54 feet deep from the floor of the well room, or from the summit of the mount about 70 feet; the whole mount is now thickly grown with large trees. A tablet in the courtyard, erected in 1877 by J. M. Davenport esq. Clerk of the Peace, records the "Black Assize" of July, 1577, when the Lord Chief Baron, the High Sheriff, and about 300 other persons died from a sudden outbreak of gaol fever. The prison was enlarged in 1858, by converting the governor's residence into a ward for female prisoners, and erecting a new house for the governor.

Petty sessions are held by the county magistrates of the Bullingdon division in the County Hall every Saturday at twelve o'clock; and here also the members of the Bullingdon Highway Board hold their meetings.

The City Conservative Club, opened at the Roebuck Hotel on Monday, February 22nd, 1869, and now located in commodious premises in St. Aldate's street, is intended as a place of association for citizens who promote the Conservative interest. The entrance fee is £1 1s. and the yearly subscription £1 1s.

The Reform Club, incorporated in 1873 as a social and political association, has about 250 members, including all the leading liberals of the city. The Club House is situated at the Liberal Hall, in New Inn Hall street, a building of stone, erected in 1877, for the meetings of ward associations. The entrance fee and subscriptions are the same as in the Conservative Club.

The Clarendon Club (non-political) has premises at 54 Corn Market street. President, Mr. W. Brain J.P.; secretary, Mr. Thomas Forder Plowman. Annual subscription, two guineas for the first 100 members; members enrolled since the completion of that number pay in addition an entrance fee of one guinea. The club rooms are furnished with every comfort and convenience, and are promptly supplied with the morning and evening papers, the principal London and local weekly journals and various reviews, magazines, and works of reference. Refreshments of every kind are supplied to members. The club-room is open every day from 9 in the morning till 12 at night, except on Sundays, when it is closed at 11 p.m. The entrance fee and subscription are each £2 2s.

The Oxfordshire Club, consisting of county magistrates and twenty-five other gentlemen in the county, has its Rooms at the Clarendon Hotel; honorary secretary, Thomas M. Davenport esq.

The Oxfordshire Agricultural Society, established in 1811, for the exhibition of stock and implements, holds annual shows in the various towns of the county. Subscription, one guinea per annum. Secretary, Mr. Thomas Forder Plowman, 65 Corn Market street, Oxford. The Royal Agricultural Society was founded at Oxford, July 17th, 1839: the inaugural dinner, attended by upwards of 2,500 persons, being held on the 19th July in the quadrangle of Queen's College. The annual show of the Society was held at Oxford, July 11-22, 1870, on a site of 30 acres, adjoining the Woodstock road.

The New Post Office, erected in 1880, on the west side of St. Aldate's street, in lieu of the premises so long occupied for that purpose beneath the Town Hall, is a building of stone, well-designed in an early style of Gothic, and has the royal arms in the tympanum of the principal entrance; the ground floor is devoted to the Money Order and Savings Bank departments and the general business of the office; the two upper floors being occupied by the Telegraph department; at the back is a large sorting-room.

On the northern side of the High street is the Market place, designed by Gwynn, and opened on St. Thomas's day, 1774, under an Act of Parliament passed in 1771 for the improvement of the city; it consists of three principal avenues, connected at intervals by alleys of less width, and has a large covered court with a fountain at the north or Market street entrance, for the sale of fish, and ornamental shrubs and trees; the main portion is devoted to meat, vegetables and fruit, and the whole market is open daily. Its control has been vested in the Chancellor of the University since the reign of Edward III. and is now exercised by two Clerks of the Market, appointed annually; one by the Chancellor and the other by the Vice-Chancellor, their jurisdiction extending also to the inspection of weights and measures. A cattle market is held every second Wednesday, on Gloucester green. All regulations concerning the market are made by twelve commissioners appointed for the purpose.

The annual and historic fair of St. Giles, one of the largest and most popular still existing, is held on the first or second Monday and Tuesday after September 1st, i.e. if that day falls on Saturday, the fair is held on the 3rd and 4th; but if on Sunday, then on the 9th and 10th; another annual fair is held on the Thursday before Michaelmas, for toys &c.

The principal Banks are the London and County, a lofty and well-designed building of stone, in the Gothic style, erected in 1866, at a cost of £10,000, immediately opposite All Saints' Church; Parsons, Thomson & Co. High street; Oxford University and City Bank, 110 St. Aldate's street; and Gillett & Co. 54 Corn Market street; the Savings Bank, established in 1867, is in St. Aldate's street, adjoining the Town Hall.

Several Newspapers are published here. The 'Oxford Journal' (conservative), established April 11th, 1753, 3d.; 'Oxford Chronicle and Berks and Bucks Gazette' (liberal), established Feb. 4th, 1837, 2d.; and the 'Oxford Times' (independent), originated Sept. 6th, 1862, all published on Fridays. The 'Oxford Guardian' (conservative), 1d. began in 1872 and is published on Wednesday; the 'Oxford and Cambridge Review and Under Graduates' Journal,' 6d. published every Thursday during term; and the 'Oxford University Herald' (conservative), 4d. established in 1806 and published on Saturdays. The 'Oxford University Gazette,' 6d. which first appeared in 1870, is an official publication issued weekly from the Clarendon Press. With the 'Oxford Times' is connected the 'Oxfordshire Weekly News' (Wednesday) and the 'Abingdon Herald' (Saturday), each 1d.

The Radcliffe Infirmary, erected under a legacy bequeathed by Dr. John Radcliffe, the celebrated royal physician, is a plain but spacious structure of stone, occupying a retired site on the west side of the Woodstock road, some distance above St. Giles's Church; the building was designed by Mr. Leadbetter, of London, the foundation stone being laid in 1752; but the hospital was not opened for the reception of patients until Oct. 18, 1770; the ground on which it stands, comprising five acres, was the gift of Thomas Rowney esq. formerly one of the members of Parliament for the city of Oxford. Besides seven ordinary wards, the hospital contains a special ward for infectious diseases, an accident ward and two children's wards, some of which were opened as additions, by Prince Leopold (Duke of Albany), June 2, 1877; the number of in-patients in 1881 was 1,263 and out-patients 4,365; the hospital is supported by endowments and voluntary contributions. In front extends a well-kept flower garden, in the centre of which is an ornamental fountain, and on the north side stands the hospital chapel of St. Luke, wholly built in 1864 at the expense of T. Combe esq. founder of St. Barnabas' church; it consists simply of chancel and nave, with bell-turret, designed in a peculiarly elegant form of Early English Gothic, by A. W. Blomfield esq. M.A.; the interior is adorned by four valuable paintings of the Evangelists, purchased by the founder in 1867 at Troitska monastery, 54 miles from Moscow. The chapel was consecrated Oct. 17, 1865, by the late Bishop Wilberforce.

The Music Room, Holywell street, is a plain building of stone, in a heavy Italian style, with a deep cornice and pediment and a projecting portico. It was originally built for concerts and other musical entertainments given by members of the University, and was erected between 1742-8, from a design by Dr. Thomas Camplin, vice-principal of St. Edmund Hall, at a cost of £1,263; it is now private property, and is used for the practices of local musical societies and various miscellaneous purposes.

The Masonic Hall, in Alfred street, High street, was erected in 1833, and is the place of meeting for Alfred, Bertie and Churchill lodges, the Alfred Chapter of Royal Arch Freemasons and the Preceptory of Cœur de Lion. The hall belonging to the Apollo University lodge, adjoins the Clarendon hotel in Corn Market street, and was specially erected for that lodge in 1865.

The Oxford Gymnasium, built in 1858, and situated in Alfred street, High street, is admirably fitted with every kind of modern appliance for the practice of athletes; prizes are terminally awarded to members of the University for excellence in fencing and other exercises.

The Oxford University Racquet Courts form an extensive block of buildings, substantially constructed of brick with stone dressings, situated at the back of Holywell street, and accessible either in that direction or from the New Parks; there are other racquet courts of considerable extent in Museum terrace, west of the Parks and reached from St. John street through the 'Lamb and Flag' yard.

There are several large and well-kept Cricket Grounds, one of the finest being that belonging to Christ Church, on the south side of the Iffley road; the curators of the New Parks have also recently sanctioned the formation of a new ground with pavilion within that enclosure.

There are also a number of good Baths and Bathing Places, of which the oldest and best known is that called "Loggerhead," more properly "Leaguer" head, on the Cherwell and eastward of the Parks; on the upper Isis, a little north of the Botley road, is "Tumbling Bay;" and on the lower river, close to the historic "Gut," a new bathing place was constructed some years since by the University on a convenient portion of the backwater; private swimming baths will be found in Merton street and St. Clements.

The principal Hotels are the Mitre, in High street, now the oldest establishment of the kind in the city, and still maintaining, as in the old coaching days, a high reputation; the Clarendon and the Roebuck, in the Corn Market, both hostelries of long standing and intimately connected with the political history of the borough; the Randolph, in Beaumont street, erected in 1864, at a cost of £18,000, a new and fine hotel and extremely well-appointed; the King's Arms, Park street, a quiet, old-fashioned house, near the New Parks; and the Golden Cross, Corn Market, well known and largely patronised as a commercial hotel.

Oxford is especially celebrated for the variety and beauty of its promenades and walks, both within and around the city: of these, the various College gardens, nearly all of which are open to the public, claim a foremost place; next may be mentioned the famous "Broad Walk," a magnificent avenue south of Christ Church, lined with lofty elms and nearly a quarter of a mile in length; almost at right angles to its western end is the fine avenue, 600 yards long, constructed in 1868, in order to afford a better and readier access to the river, and both are again connected with the shady walk which fringes the right bank of the Cherwell and is continued in the delightful "Water Walks" of Magdalen, the northern side of which is well known as "Addison's Walk;" the latest addition to the public walks of Oxford is the fine stretch of sward, 93 acres in extent, lying eastward of St. Giles's street and called "The Parks;" it extends from the elm walk fronting Keble College on the west to the Cherwell on the east, the walks around it, nearly two miles in extent, being tastefully planted with a great variety of rare and curious trees and shrubs, forming an arboretum; on its eastern confines, a wooden bridge, crossing a branch of the Cherwell, leads to a pleasant embanked walk, lined on either side with pollard willows, which winds for about half a mile between its twin streams, eventually leading past King's mill into Marston lane, and is popularly known as "Mesopotamia."

At the northern extremity of the churchyard of St. Mary Magdalen and westward of Balliol College, is the Martyrs' Memorial, an elaborate monumental cross in the Decorated style, designed on the model of the Eleanor cross at Waltham, by the late Sir Gilbert Scott R.A. and Mr. Moffatt, and erected in 1841, at a cost of £5,000, to commemorate the sufferings of Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer, in 1555 and 1556; it is 73 feet in height, including its basement of steps and consists of three stages, the second containing, within open enriched canopies, statues of Archbishop Cranmer and Bishops Ridley and Latimer, by Henry Weekes esq.; the upper stage terminates appropriately in an ornamental cross; and on the north side of the lower stage is a dedicatory inscription. The memorial, however, does not mark the actual site of the martyrdom, which took place at or near a spot now marked by an iron cross in the centre of the road at the top of Broad street.

The ancient city walls are still in part extant; the most considerable portion, consisting of the north-east angle, now forms the north and east boundary of the gardens of New College, and is continued westward through the college precincts to the back of the houses in Holywell street; it comprises four crenellated bastions, with a lofty postern gate on the north, still in use, and has at intervals flights of stone steps leading up to the battlements, which, though much overgrown with ivy, may still be traversed; another portion with a single bastion forms the southern boundary of Merton College gardens, and other fragments exist behind the line of houses in Broad street.

Frewin Hall, a small sombre-looking mansion at the back of Corn Market street, is celebrated as the abode of the Prince of Wales while he was in residence here: the entrance to it is through a narrow passage, shut in by tall monastic-looking walls, at the end of which is a small, low-pointed gateway overshadowed with limes and giving access to a little court, in which stands the old-fashioned house in which the Prince lived; His Royal Highness still remains, as when in residence, a member of Christ Church.

Among the remains of ancient houses in Oxford the most interesting relic is a portion of a fine mansion of the sixteenth century, at the southern end of St. Aldate's street, believed to have been originally built in 1546 for Robert King, last abbot of Oseney and first bishop of Oxford, but refronted or repaired in 1628; the ceilings of the various rooms are richly decorated and bear the arms of Edward VI.; and the north side, with its projecting windows, rich carving and pargetted walls furnishes an admirable example of a very picturesque style: there are other old and interesting houses below this, bearing the arms of Bishop King on the ceilings, and several still linger in the High street, St. Giles', and elsewhere.

Oxford was anciently the site of the two abbeys of Oseney and Rewley, both of which stood westward of the city and near the river; Oseney Abbey was founded in 1129 by Robert D'Oiley, nephew of the first of that name, for Canons of the Augustinian order, and was dedicated to St. Mary; its buildings, so extensive and magnificent as to be "the envy of all other religious houses," were situated about a quarter of a mile south-west of St Thomas's church, and partly occupied the ground now enclosed as a cemetery: the church, placed on the east side of a spacious quadrangle, was 332 feet in length, with lofty western and central towers, in the first of which hung the fine peal now at Christ Church: in 1542, on the erection of the See of Oxford, Oseney was made the cathedral church, but in 1545 the see was transferred to Christ Church, and in the next year the abbey was suppressed, its yearly revenues being then estimated at £654 10s. 2d. Some portions of the structure remain incorporated with the buildings of Oseney mill. Rewley abbey, or de Regali Loco, stood in north Oseney, on the left bank of the river, and was founded in 1281 by Edmund, Earl of Cornwall, for an abbot and fifteen monks of the Cistercian order, and also dedicated to the Virgin Mary; the church, a fine edifice, had a lofty tower; the existing remains consist almost wholly of a portion of the east wall, with a Perpendicular gateway, overhanging the river bank; at its dissolution there were fifteen monks, and its yearly revenue was £174 3s.

By means of the river Isis and the Oxford canal, which has a communication with the whole of the waterways of the kingdom, and by railway communication, a considerable inland trade is carried on, chiefly in corn and coals, for which convenient wharfs and quays are provided. Brawn is here made in large quantities, both for immediate consumption and for the London market; and the city is also famous for the manufacture of a peculiar kind of small sausage, highly esteemed in the locality.

Total—39,740. The population of the urban sanitary district in 1881 was 38,289.

SUMMERTOWN, a northern suburb of Oxford, is an ecclesiastical parish formed in 1834 out of the parish of St. Giles. The church of St. John the Baptist, a cruciform structure, in the Early English style, situated about one and a half from St. Giles' Church, was erected in 1833, at a cost of £1,600, from designs by Mr. Underwood, architect, and consists of chancel, nave, transepts, north aisle and an octagonal turret on the western gable containing 1 bell: it has about 400 sittings, of which 300 are free. The register dates from the year 1835. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £160 with residence, in the gift of St. John's College, Oxford, and held since 1874 by the Rev. John Erskine Binney M.A. of Brasenose College.

St. Edward's School, situated on a healthy site on the Woodstock road and immediately south of Summertown, forms a considerable and attractive pile of buildings constructed of red brick with stone facings in the Early English style, from designs by Mr. W. Wilkinson, architect, of Oxford, the first portion of which, erected in 1873, was opened on November 25 in that year: the whole, when completed, will surround three sides of a spacious quadrangle, two of which and part of a third are already fitted; these consist, on the north, of the school-house, with dormitories for more than 100 boys, a dining hall, masters' rooms and class-rooms; at the western end of this block is placed the warden's house; at the other, connected with it by a cloister, stands the chapel, a well-proportioned building of stone, with a tower and spire at the south-west angle, consecrated June 5, 1877; the east side comprises a large school-room, 84ft. by 28ft., beneath which are the library, masters' common room and mathematical room; the south side is designed for three boarding houses, one of which is now finished, and there will then eventually be room for 200 boys, besides day boys; the west side, adjoining the road, is occupied by the entrance lodge; and on the opposite side is a cricket field, seven acres in extent, and beyond it an artificial bathing place; near at hand is also an infirmary. The religious teaching, framed on the lines of the Prayer Book and Church Catechism, is systematically and professedly dogmatic, while the course of secular instruction is that ordinarily pursued in the best public schools, special arrangements being made in the upper school for the study of modern subjects; there are entrance scholarships, usually two a year, of £30 per annum, and a scheme is also on foot for the establishment of a number of exhibitions to be given by nomination; the fees are £75 yearly for boarders and 30 guineas for day boys, and for boarders in the head masters' house 80 guineas; including the new boarding house for 30 boys, the buildings are now available for 140; the number at present in attendance being 112. The school was first founded in 1863 by the Rev. Thomas Chamberlain, vicar of St. Thomas the Martyr, and after having been for some years located in a private house in New Inn Hall street, Oxford, was transferred to its present site under the direction of the Rev. A. B. Simeon, then head master and now warden of the school, who intends, as soon as possible, to make arrangements for its future permanency by placing it in the hands of trustees.

Cowley St. John, an important suburban district lying to the east of the city, was formed into an ecclesiastical parish in 1868 out of the civil parishes of Cowley and St. Clement's, Oxford. The church of St. John the Evangelist, Stockmore street, is a small structure of iron, wholly inadequate to the needs of the increasing population of this district, but it is hoped that a large church, for which a site has been promised, may soon be erected. In the same parish, but more to the south, and immediately connected with the new cemetery of St. John, an additional church is now in course of erection, which, it is expected, will be ready for consecration in August, 1883; the designs when fully carried out, will make it one of the most beautiful among the many churches in Oxford. The contract for the whole is £13,000, but only part of the building can at present be built, and of this the chancel is now completed. The register dates from the year 1870. The living is a perpetual curacy, yearly value from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, £360, in the gift of and held since 1870 by the Rev. Richard Meux Benson M.A. of Christ Church, Oxford. St. John the Evangelist's Mission House, Marston street, is an Anglican ecclesiastical and monastic establishment under the direction of the incumbent; the basement contains a refectory and offices: above is a parish room with various other apartments, and 26 rooms for members of the society, besides a large and well-appointed chapel: the clergy resident here hold missions at any time in all parts of the country, by invitations of the local clergy. The National Hospital of St. John the Evangelist for Incurables was erected in 1873, from designs by the late Charles Buckeridge esq. of Oxford, the foundation stone being laid in May of that year by H.R.H. Prince Leopold, then a student of Christ Church, and occupies a site of seven acres adjoining the church, the whole extent of which is surrounded by a uniform wall. The hospital originated in a large bequest, given for the purpose by Mr. W. H. Whinfield, and was brought into existence by the energy of Miss Sandford, a lady who had entirely devoted herself to this work; the hospital, which has been for some time closed, is now reopened under the charge of the Sisters of All Saints, and there are at present 12 inmates of the institution. The block already erected has cost £4,000; the expense of the whole is estimated at £50,000, and the building, when completed, will hold 150 patients. The population of this locality has greatly increased within the last ten years, consisting in 1871 of 3,691 and in 1881 of 4,324.

Grandpont, in the county of Berks, is a tithing of the parish of St. Aldate, Oxford, from which it is separated by the Isis, and is bounded by the parish of South Hinksey on the west, being in the hundred of Hormer and union, local board and county court district of Oxford. The land is the property of Christ Church, Oxford. The soil is clay and gravel; subsoil, gravel. The chief crop is hay. The area is included with Oxford. Letters received from Oxford, which is the nearest money order office. The names of residents will be found under Oxford. Grandpont house, a large mansion built partly on arched stone piers over a branch of the Isis, and surrounded on either side by pleasant and well kept grounds, extending to the river, was for some time the residence of Prince Leopold, while an undergraduate at Oxford.

New Hinksey is a modern and populous hamlet adjoining Oxford on the south, lying between the Abingdon road on the east and the Great Western railway on the west, in the parish of South Hinksey and county of Berks, but has lately been included in the Oxford Local Board district. The names of the inhabitants will be found under Oxford. The church of St. John the Evangelist is a small building of brick, with stone dressings, in the Early English style, erected in 1870, and containing 300 sittings.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY.

The opinion which ascribes the foundation of the University of Oxford to Alfred the Great, if it cannot be maintained as a truth at least contains no intrinsic marks of error, and it seems at any rate highly probable that he at one time resided in Oxford, and became a liberal patron of such isolated educational foundations as then already existed, but the actual foundation of Oxford as a University, cannot safely be assigned to a remoter date than 1267, in which year Walter de Merton purchased the site for the college now called by his name, and the earliest charters were granted by King John. The University was incorporated by Queen Elizabeth, in 1571, as the Chancellor, Masters and Scholars of the University of Oxford, but its constitution has been almost wholly altered and its powers greatly extended by the Oxford University Act of 1854, and by additional Acts in 1856 and 1857. The Chancellor is elected by Convocation, and the office is held for life, but he is not required to attend the meetings of the University except at his installation and in case of royal visits; the Vice-Chancellor, acting as the commissary of the Chancellor, is in fact the chief executive officer of the University, and is nominated annually by the Chancellor from the different Heads of colleges in turn, and he appoints as his deputies four pro-Vice Chancellors. The High Steward is appointed by the Chancellor and approved by Convocation, and also holds his office for life, but his duties, which are of a varied and important character, are usually performed by a Deputy Steward. The Proctors are two graduates who have completed four and not completed fifteen years' standing in the degree of M.A. and are elected annually by the colleges and halls jointly, in accordance with a new cycle of 30 years, framed in 1859; each proctor nominates two pro-Proctors, who must be masters of arts of any college or hall of at least three years standing, as their respective deputies; with these officers rests the discipline of all members of the University still in statu pupillari (i.e., those who have not taken the degree of M.A., B.C.L., B.M. or one of the superior degrees). Offences of the gravest class fall properly under the cognizance of the High Steward, but are usually dealt with by the Vice-Chancellor, who is also the judge in cases of debt and other civil actions, and is aided by an Assessor. The Public Orator, who is chosen by Convocation and must be a member of that body, retains the office for life, his duty being to write letters and addresses, and to make orations in the name of the University upon public occasions. The University sends two members to parliament, a privilege granted by letters patent of James I. in 1604, when the elective right was conferred on the doctors and actual masters, amounting to about 458; but the number of registered electors is now 3,786. Candidates for this office enjoy the privilege of being entirely free from any expenses attendant on election, and it is also a part of the traditional etiquette that they shall neither canvass, nor take any part in the proceedings. The present members are the Right Hon. Sir John Robert Mowbray bart. P.C., D.L., J.P., D.C.L. and John Gilbert Talbot esq. M.A., D.L., J.P. both of Christ Church.

The Keeper of the Archives was first appointed in 1834, and his duty is to arrange and preserve all muniments and papers relating to the property of the University, or its rights and privileges, and to keep all the University records and registers; he is elected by Convocation, and is a delegate of privileges ex officio.

The Registrar of the University, who is also elected by Convocation, must have taken the degree of M.A., B.C.L. or be a notary public. He attends all meetings of the Hebdomadal Council, Congregation and Convocation, and registers their proceedings.

Delegates and Curators, some of whom are perpetual and others only temporary, are appointed by Convocation for the execution of special business relating to the University; there are five delegates of Unattached Students; ten for the control of the University Press, and eighteen for the management of Local Examinations; the University Chest, Libraries, Museum, University buildings &c. are each in charge of Curators appointed for the purpose.

The government of the University is vested in four distinct assemblies :

1. The Congregation of Regents, or ancient House of Congregation, for the granting of degrees, and ratifying the nominations of examiners by the Vice-Chancellor and Proctors, consisting of about 400 members.
2. The House of Convocation, which transacts all the formal business of the University, except such as specially belongs to the two Houses of Congregation, and consists of all those who, being on the register and having paid the statutable fees, have attained to the degree of M.A., D.C.L. and M.D.; the number being generally about 5,000.
3. The Modern House of Congregation, established by Act of Parliament in 1854, the business of which is chiefly confined to legislation; it consists of Professors, Examiners and other officials, and of such members of Convocation as have resided for 20 weeks during the year previous to that in which they become members, within the limits of the University; the list of members is revised every year in October term.
4. The Hebdomadal (i.e. weekly) Council, originally formed by Charles I. in 1631, at the suggestion of Archbishop Laud, and remodelled in 1854; the members, 23 in number, are elected by Congregation No. 1, and meet every Monday at 1.30, or as may be required; the particular business of the Council is to take preliminary steps in all matters of legislation relating to the University generally.

During the civil war the colleges and halls took part with the King, and in 1643, a mint having been established at New Inn Hall, sent their plate to be coined for his use.

Every member of the University within a fortnight of his having been entered on the books of a college or hall, or received as an unattached student, must be matriculated or formally enrolled on the register of the University; and for this purpose he appears in academic dress before the Vice-Chancellor accompanied by the dean of his college or other responsible officer, and having written his name, in Latin, in the register and paid the statutable fees, he is admonished pro forma by the Vice-Chancellor to observe all the statutes, privileges and customs of the University, and receives from him a certificate of matriculation, and a copy of the University statutes. Degrees are conferred by the University in the faculties of arts, law, divinity, medicine and music; and members of the University, previous to obtaining a degree, are styled "undergraduates." For the degree of Bachelor of Arts, a residence of twelve terms is necessary, but, without residing for the whole of each term, the requirements of the University may be satisfied by a residence of 42 days (not necessarily consecutive) in Hilary and Michaelmas Terms, and of 21 days in Easter and Trinity Terms, in each year; the Terms of residence may also be distributed (so far as the University is concerned) over a number of years. It is also necessary, before admission to this degree, to pass three examinations, viz., Responsions, and two Public Examinations; the first of these is held three times a year, but is not required from those who have already passed the Previous Examination at Cambridge, or obtained a certificate from the examiners appointed under the Oxford Schools Examination Delegates, or from the Delegates under the Statute for examining candidates not being members of the University; the First Public Examination is held twice a year; but no person is required to pass this examination who has already passed the General Examination at Cambridge, and has been incorporated at this University; the Second Public Examination is also held twice a year; the regulations affecting it, which are both numerous and elaborate, will be found fully detailed in the published Examination Statutes. Candidates for the degree of Master of Arts must have taken the B.A. degree, and have entered on the 27th term from their matriculation, but no further examination is required; an M.A. becomes a Regent Master, and as such, a member of Convocation, at the expiration of the term in which he has taken that degree. For the degree of Bachelor of Civil Law, 27 terms of residence are necessary, and candidates must also pass a prescribed examination, in which Honours may be obtained, if the 25th Term from Matriculation has not been exceeded. For the degree of Doctor of Civil Law, 5 years must have been completed from the time of admission to the B.C.L. degree. Candidates for the degree of Bachelor of Medicine, must be already B.A. or B.C.L. and have spent 4 years in the study of medicine; and they have also to pass two examinations at intervals of two years. For the degree of Doctor of Medicine a period of three years is required from the time of admission to the M.B. degree. Candidates for the degree of Bachelor of Divinity must have completed 3 years from the day on which they became Regent Masters of Arts, and must have been admitted to Priest's Orders; they have also to read publicly in the Divinity School two original dissertations on special Theological subjects. For the degree of Doctor of Divinity, four years are required from the date of admission as B.D. candidates must also publicly read and expound in the Divinity School, on three separate days, selected portions of Holy Scripture. Candidates for the degree of Bachelor of Music are required to Matriculate as members of the University, and to pass three examinations, of which the first may be either (a) Responsions, or (b) one of its prescribed equivalents; the other two examinations are wholly musical and residence is not necessary. For the degree of Doctor of Music, 5 years are required from the date of admission as MUS. BAC.; candidates must also pass an examination and compose a special work for voices and a full orchestra, which, if approved, they must publicly conduct, in the presence of the Professor. Persons who have obtained the degree of B.A., B.C.L., or M.B. and are resident in a British colony, may be admitted to superior degrees, while absent, under certain conditions; and members of the Universities of Cambridge and Dublin can also be incorporated conditionally into this University, with the same status or degree they held in their own.

The academic dress ordinarily worn varies according to rank and degree; a Master of Arts wears a black gown with long pendent sleeves, having a semi-circular cut at the bottom and a hood of black silk lined with crimson; a Doctor in Divinity, the same dress, with cassock, cincture and scarf, and a hood of scarlet cloth, lined with black silk a Bachelor of Divinity, a similar gown, with a hood of black silk; a Bachelor of Arts, black gown, with full sleeves looped at the elbow and terminating in a point, and a black silk hood, edged with white fur; a Proctor, black gown with facings and short full sleeves of black velvet, a small tippet attached to the left shoulder, and a large ermine hood; and a Pro-Proctor, a Master of Arts' gown, faced with velvet and a tippet on the left shoulder. Doctors of Medicine, Civil Law and Music wear gowns of black silk, with a broad flat collar, and long sleeves, square at the bottom, and are richly braided; Bachelors of the same faculties wear similar gowns but less richly braided; Doctors of Medicine wear a hood of scarlet cloth, lined with pink silk; those of Civil Law, a similar hood, lined with crimson silk; and those of Music, a hood of white damasked silk, lined with crimson satin; Bachelors of these faculties have hoods of slightly varying shades of blue, edged with white fur. Doctors of the superior faculties have also full dress gowns, and a special congregation habit of scarlet cloth, similar to the chimere worn by bishops; noblemen are entitled to wear ordinarily a black silk gown with full sleeves, and for full dress a gown of murrey coloured damask silk, similar to the B.C.L. gown, but richly adorned with gold lace, and a cap of black velvet with gold tassel, but these costumes are now rarely seen. The dresses of undergraduates are, for a scholar a black stuff gown with short full sleeves, and for a commoner a similar gown without sleeves but with a broad strip hanging behind from each shoulder to the bottom of the dress and gathered into plaits near the top. Gentlemen commoners wear a gown similar in shape to the B.C.L. gown, but ornamented with plaiting, instead of braid, upon the sleeves; they are also entitled to wear a special dress gown and caps of black velvet, but the head dress usually worn by all members of the University alike is a square black cloth cap with black silk tassel.

The Ecclesiastical patronage of the University as a body, is not extensive, consisting only of five benefices.

UNIVERSITY BUILDINGS.

The Sheldonian Theatre, situated in Broad street, is one of the principal buildings of Oxford, and was opened in 1669, having been erected in 1664-9 from designs by Sir Christopher Wren, at a cost of £15,000, the whole of which was defrayed by Archbishop Sheldon, who added £2,000, to be laid out in estates for its support and repair; and the late Dr. Wills, Warden of Wadham College, left £1,000 for the same purpose: the southern front is disposed in two stories of the Corinthian order; over the entrance are the arms of Archbishop Sheldon, the founder, and in niches at the extremities are statues of the archbishop and the Duke of Ormond; the entrance on this side is used only on special occasions: the remainder of the building forms an ellipse, the lower storey being rusticated, and the upper lighted by ranges of spacious windows and divided by pilasters and surmounted by a balustrade; above the south entrance is a statue of Charles II. The building is surmounted by a cupola, added in 1838, from which a very fine view of the city is obtained, and is enclosed on the street side by a dwarf wall, and iron railings secured to tall square piers, terminating in huge grotesque heads, intended to represent various sages of antiquity; within the theatre are portraits of the founder, of James Duke of Ormond, Sir Christopher Wren and Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham and formerly rector of Lincoln College, a liberal benefactor both to his College and to the University, and founder of "the Creweian Oration," which to this day is that which actually constitutes the annual "Commemoration" (viz. of Founders and Benefactors). The ceiling of the theatre, painted by Streeter, represents allegorically the Triumph of Religion, Art and Science over their foes; it was repainted in 1762, at a cost of £1,000, and further repairs took place in 1802 and 1826. In 1876, a new and very fine organ was substituted for the old organ, set up in 1768 by Mr. Byfield. Here, in June, the annual "Commemoration" is held, when various prize compositions are recited and honorary degrees are conferred on distinguished personages; the building is also occasionally used for Diocesan Conferences, public meetings, and concerts; the interior is surrounded by a wide and deep amphitheatre of seats, above which, supported on pillars, is a very spacious gallery, and will hold 3,000 persons. Of the many ceremonials and receptions which have on various occasions taken place in the theatre, the most imposing of modern times were the visit of the allied sovereigns in 1814 and the installation of the last three chancellors, viz. the Duke of Wellington in 1834, the Earl of Derby in 1853, and the Marquess of Salisbury in 1869, when congratulatory poems were recited by graduate and undergraduate members af the University; the Commemoration of 1863, marked by the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales, will also be still fresh in the recollection of many.

The New Examination Schools are situated at the eastern end of the High street and stand in part on the site so long occupied by the well-known Angel hotel; the buildings, so far as at present completed, form three sides of a square, open towards the east, in which direction the space enclosed is still bounded by the dilapidated tenements of King street. The style adopted by the architect, T. Graham Jackson esq. M.A. fellow of Wadham College, is a species of Italianised Gothic, the general character of which is at once elegant and picturesque and exhibits considerable originality of design; the principal front is on the north side, facing the High street, and has in the centre an elaborately carved porch, supported on Ionic pillars, above which rises the tall ornamental louvre on the roof of the entrance hall; at either end of the façade is a slightly projecting bay, with a spacious mullioned window and an arcaded parapet; the great north hall, entered immediately from the High street and intended as a waiting hall, is 79 feet in length by 26 wide; it is finely panelled all round in oak, and has a double coved oak ceiling with tie beam roof; on its south side three deep arches on highly enriched corbels admit to the corridor and support a panelled gallery, extending along the whole of that side, and connected by an open arcade at the end with the rooms on the first floor; on the ground floor are the viva voce rooms, nine in number, connected by a continuous corridor which expands at the north-west and south-west angles into large vestibules, with flat timbered roofs, supported on pillars composed of various rare marbles, the shafts of those in the vestibule at the south west consisting of two perfect blocks of the famous Cippolini marble, believed to be the only specimens in the kingdom, and for which the ancient quarry was especially opened. On the first floor are the north, south and east writing schools, two of which hold 200 students each, and the third 120; these communicate by means of ante rooms, and at the north-east angle are two other rooms, a luncheon room for examiners and various offices; this floor is gained from below by a broad staircase of two flights on the west side, with a massive balustrading of red marble, enclosing foliaged panels in alabaster and various coloured marbles, and leading immediately to the principal ante-room, partly supported by an arcading of alabaster and inlaid marbles carried on coupled columns: the north and south doorways lead to the writing schools above mentioned; magnificent apartments, wainscotted with panelled oak and lighted by wide and lofty recessed windows, themselves surrounded and surmounted by panelled oak carving; the roofs are coved in ribbed panels, filled with rich designs in stucco, and are held together by tie beams; each doorway is enclosed in panelled oak, with carvings of elaborate character and is curtained with heavy tapestry: the length of the northern school is 190 feet, of the southern school 110 feet, and of the eastern school 93 feet, with a general width of 34 feet; the two larger schools are broken into the shape of the letters L and T, and can be united when necessary, so as to form a suite for grand university receptions. The clocks throughout the building—of which there are twenty—are all electrical, and in every room there are electric bells communicating with a common indicator in the hall, by which the officials may without trouble learn in what direction their services are required. The interior elevation, facing the quadrangle, is relieved on its western side by a clock tower of three orders, with twin pillars on either side, supporting an entablature enclosing spacious windows; the third stage rises above the roof and is highly enriched; under each of the windows on the other sides are carved in sunken panels the arms of the different colleges; over the main entrance in the High street are two finely carved panels, that on the south represents the examination of undergraduates, and the other on the north, the conferment of degrees; the figures are all life-like and are beautifully chiselled.

The Bodleian Library, founded by Sir Thomas Bodley, and opened in 1602, now ranks in extent and importance next after the British Museum among the libraries the United Kingdom. The pre-existing library, founded in 1445 by Humphrey, duke of Gloucester, was wholly despoiled in 1550 by the Commissioners of Edward VI., and Sir Thomas Bodley, on proposing, in 1598, to refit and endow it, found the walls bare, and not a volume of the previous stores remaining. He, however, restored the room, now the central part of the great reading room, and first opened by Duke Humphrey in 1480; and with the help of friends again furnished it with books both printed and in manuscript, and having provided for its endowment, it was reopened Nov. 8, 1602. Among the chief early benefactors were the Earl of Pembroke, Sir Kenelm Digby, John Selden and Archbishop Laud. Since Dec. 12, 1610, the library has had a right, by an agreement then made with the Stationers' Company, to a copy of every book entered at Stationers' Hall, and its natural rate of growth has been accelerated from time to time by additional benefactions, especially those of Rawlinson, Gough, Malone and Douce, and by large purchases from its own revenues. It now contains not only valuable topographical, historical and classical collections, but also an almost unrivalled store of Oriental and especially Hebrew literature. The number of manuscripts in the library may be roughly estimated at nearly 30,000, the printed volumes at 40,000, and the separate printed works at over a million; the older part of the library consists of a large reading-room in the shape of an H, and the entire quadrangle of the old schools; these consist of all the rooms surrounding the quadrangle on the ground floor, each entered by a separate door opening into it, the names of the respective faculties being inscribed over the several doors in gilt letters; but since the erection of the new schools in the High street, they have ceased to be used for the general public examinations, and with the exception of one room on the north, which contains a portion of the Arundel marbles and the music school, they are now devoted to the purposes of the library; in the music school, in which are held the examinations for degrees in that faculty, are a number of fine portraits of former professors of music. The second floor of the quadrangle is partly used as a picture gallery, which contains also various models, busts and curiosities, including the veritable lantern of Guido Fawkes: some valuable books and manuscripts are displayed in glass cases in the reading-room; on the east side is the gateway tower known as the "Tower of the Five Orders," which dates from the time of James I. and exhibits on the inner façade examples of the various architectural orders, rising in successive storeys one above the other, together with a sitting statue of the King presenting copies of his works to Fame and to the University. In an upper room are preserved the records of the University, in charge of the keeper of the Archives, the Rev. John Griffiths D.D. The western façade of the quadrangle is panelled and is pierced with a doorway admitting to a lofty rectangular groined and vaulted corridor, properly called the "Proscholium," but more generally known as the "pig market," at the north end of which is an open archway leading to a smaller quadrangle enclosed on the north by the Sheldonian Theatre, on the west by the ante-chamber of the Convocation House and on the south by the Divinity School, a magnificent apartment in the Perpendicular style, begun in 1445 and completed in 1480, chiefly by the munificence of Humphrey duke of Gloucester and Thomas Kemp, bishop of London; although despoiled, in the reign of Edward VI. of all the stained glass which originally adorned its spacious windows, its splendid groined roof, with elaborately carved pendants and shields of arms, still remains; in 1625, the House of Commons, driven from London on account of the plague, held its sittings here; and during the civil war it was used as a storehouse for corn, but was restored in 1669 by Sir Christopher Wren, who constructed the northern entrance; it is now used for the delivery of dissertations or expositions by candidates for degrees in Divinity and occasionally for general examinations. The Convocation House, entered from the western end of the Divinity school, was erected in 1639 and is a large apartment with high panelled wainscot and a good traceried roof, in which the meetings of convocation are held and degrees are conferred; ranges of benches occupy the sides and at the south end are raised seats for the vice-chancellor and proctors; in the apodyterium, or ante-chamber, at the opposite end, the vice-chancellor's court is held; and it is also used on degree days as a robing-room.

The building which formerly contained the Radcliffe Library, now known as the "Camera Bodleiana," was commenced in 1737 and opened with great state in 1749, the architect being James Gibbs esq. F.R.S. a Scotchman and a member of St. Mary Hall. It is a circular building, consisting of a basement forming a double octagon, 100 feet in diameter, and a circular superstructure of the Corinthian order, the whole surmounted by a lofty dome, with a cupola, supported on a continuous arcade of circular arches. The munificent founder, Dr. John Radcliffe, left £40,000 for the site and erection of the building, besides an endowment for the librarian and for the purchase of books: the noble upper room, surrounded by a wide balustraded gallery and containing many valuable casts from the antique, is now used as the general reading-room of the Bodleian, and is open to readers from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.; the select reading-room in the other part of the library being open from 9 a.m. to 3, 4 or 5 p.m. The basement, or ambulatory, is now enclosed, and, with the upper room, contains about 100,000 volumes consisting chiefly of the literature received since 1830, the entire Radcliffe library having been transferred to the New Museum.

The library is under the management of a board of curators and the librarian, who is assisted by two sub-librarians and a staff of assistants. It is open to all graduate members of the University and to all others who bring a sufficient recommendation. Parts of the library are open to visitors on payment of a small fee (unless they are accompanied by a member of the University in academical dress), and from the outer gallery of the Camera one of the best views of Oxford can be obtained. Edward Williams Byron Nicholson M.A. librarian; Adolf Neubauer M.A. Falconer Madan M.A. sub-librarians.

The Oxford University Museum, a large and handsome structure in the Venetian-Gothic style, erected in 1855-60, from the designs of Sir Thomas Deane and B. Woodward esq. of Dublin, at a cost of £80,000, stands in the Parks on the north side of the city, and has a frontage of 346 feet and a general height of 75 feet, the principal front being faced with stone on a ground work of brick; as an educational institution it is the result of a scheme first promoted in 1848, to bring under one roof the different collections in Oxford, illustrative of the various cognate natural sciences, together with a library, laboratory, lecture rooms and other necessary apartments: the main entrance is on the west, through a finely-carved but at present unfinished doorway, leading into a large lobby and thence into the great Court, which has a glass roof supported by iron columns and arches, the spandrils of which are filled with foliage of wrought iron from natural examples: this court is 120 feet square, and contains in the central avenue zoological collections: on the north side skeletons and other anatomical objects, and on the south side the collections of reptiles and fish, with many fine specimens of minerals and fossil remains of extinct saurians and other animals: the north side is devoted to specimens of geology and anatomy: the court is surrounded by an open arcade of two storeys, giving access to all the various departments, and connecting these with the collections in the area; the piers are composed of materials representing successive geological formations, and the shafts, 125 in number, are specimens of the most important rocks of the British islands, while the capitals are exquisitely carved in imitation of natural plants and foliage: in front of the piers are a series of statues of eminent scientific men, and some part of the Ashmolean collection has also been placed in this museum. The theatre or lecture-room, also on the first floor, is a fine apartment and will seat 500 people; it is amply supplied with gas, water and drainage, for experiments: the library, 200 feet in length, contains about 50,000 volumes and has a reading-room at the north end. In other parts of the building are offices and rooms set apart for the use of the different professors and students, which are not opened to public view. In 1872 a new wing, erected in 1869-70, at a cost of £10,282, was added to the museum by the Clarendon trustees for the department of experimental philosophy. This building, known as the Clarendon laboratory, is of Bath and Hornton stone, with a tower and spire at the north-west angle and contains a large lecture-theatre and laboratories for carrying on experiments in heat, light, electricity &c. In 1861 the Radcliffe library was removed by consent of the trustees from the original building, designed by Gibbs, to two handsome rooms on the west side of the museum. This library, founded in the last century by Dr. Radcliffe, the celebrated physician, now contains about 40,000 volumes relating to physical science, including a large collection of scientific transactions and periodicals. The books are arranged under the following heads:— Philosophy, mathematics, astronomy, physics, chemistry, mineralogy, geology, voyages and travels, biological science, medicine, biographies, miscellaneous. A special feature in the library is the collection of books known as "The Students' Library," which consists of a carefully selected series of text-books and special monographs arranged according to subjects. The list of these books is revised from time to time by the professors of the different departments in the museum, and may be purchased at the library. The reading-room is open daily, except Sundays from 10 till 4 and, during term, from 7 p.m. till 9 p.m. on Mondays and Thursdays. H. W. Acland esq. M.D. and Regius professor of medicine is the librarian.

The museum will shortly be enriched by the extensive and highly valuable anthropological collection generously presented to the University by Major-General Pitt-Rivers F.R.S. consisting of upwards of 14,000 objects accumulated by him during a period of 27 years, and now (1883) on view at South Kensington. The museum is open daily to members of the University from 10 to 4, to citizens on presenting an order from a Master of Arts and to strangers from 2 to 4. The residence of the curator, at the south-east angle of the museum, is a well-built house in the Gothic style.

The Ashmolean Museum, westward of the theatre, was built in 1679-83 from plans by Mr. Thomas Wood, architect, to contain the collection of curiosities made by John Tradescant, a Dutchman, and gardener to Charles I. which his son, the younger Tradescant, bequeathed to Elias Ashmole, who in turn, in 1679, offered it to the university: the collection, including many additions made by Ashmole, is rich in manuscripts connected with heraldry and genealogy, now placed in the Bodleian Library, and the geological collection is said to be one of the best in the kingdom: many alterations have been made in the Museum, owing to the removal of the natural history specimens to the New Museum; the basement is now the receptacle of a part of the Arundel and other inscribed marbles; the middle room contains various Anglo-Saxon and Mediæval antiquities and amongst the former is the celebrated Alfred jewel; there are also ethnological collections made by Captains Cook and Beechey: the upper room, which had long been used for examinations, has quite recently been re-appropriated to the use of the museum.

The University Printing Office, situated in Walton street, northward of Worcester College, was erected in 1826-30 and is a building of the Corinthian order, with a front 252 feet in extent, from designs by Mr. Daniel Robertson and Mr. Blore, architects; it consists chiefly of two blocks of buildings, each three stories in height and connected on the principal or east front by others of one storey, in the centre of which is a lofty entrance of three arches, with an entablature and parapet, supported on Corinthian columns and thus forms three sides of a square; the south side is devoted to the various editions of the Oxford Bible, which is printed here in about 40 different languages; from the north wing the numerous classical and other works printed by the University, as well as the "University Gazette," are issued: attached are departments for electro and stereo-typing, ink-making &c. as well as a type foundry, in which all the rare types in use are cast. The University paper mill is at Lower Wolvercote, about 2 miles north of Oxford.

The Clarendon building, situated at the eastern end of Broad street, is a stately but somewhat heavy rectangular structure in the Classic style, erected in 1711-13 from the profits of the sale of Lord Clarendon's History of the Rebellion and was designed by Nicholas Hawkesmoor, one of Wren's pupils: the building is pierced by an arched passage way and is approached from the street by a broad flight of steps supporting a lofty portico, with pediment and pillars of the Tuscan order: from October 1713 to September 1830 it served as the University Press, but is now occupied by the offices of the University Registrar, Professorial lecture rooms and offices for the use of the Proctors: over the south entrance is a fine statue of the Earl of Clarendon.

The University Observatory, situated in the New Parks, was erected by the University in 1873-4 for the use of the Savilian professor, from designs by Charles Barry esq. architect and P. P. Baly esq. engineer, at a cost of about £3,000: the building consists of a square central block flanked by two towers and is placed east and west, the internal length of each side being about 21 feet 6 inches: the western or Savilian tower of two stories contains the calculators and the great Equatorial Telescope and the western or De La Rue tower, a magnificent reflecting telescope, presented by Warren De La Rue in 1875, with valuable instruments of different kinds, and both towers have revolving domes: the central portion of the building contains a meridian telescope, an altazimuth and a reflecting telescope: the Observatory also possesses a very fine and powerful spectroscope, and one room is specially set apart for astronomical photography.

The Radcliffe Observatory, situated in spacious grounds north of the Infirmary, was erected in 1772-5 at a cost of nearly £30,000, out of the funds bequeathed by Dr. Radcliffe, and from designs successively furnished by Mr. Henry Keene and Mr. James Wyatt; the building consists of a central block two stories in height and semi-circular towards the north, with lateral wings, each 69 feet in length, the total length of the principal or south front being 175 feet: from the centre rises an octagonal tower, with a conical roof, on the apex of which are figures of Atlas and Hercules supporting a large hollow globe of metal, said to be sufficiently large to contain one or more persons: the frieze is adorned with sculptures in relief, by Baron, of the eight winds, and on the walls under the platform are others representing the signs of the Zodiac and the sun modelled in Coade's artificial stone by Rossi: the tower generally was designed by Mr. Wyatt from the temple of the winds at Athens; the building is amply supplied with astronomical instruments and apartments for observation and for lectures, and connected with the eastern wing by a covered way is the residence of the Observer, from whom an order must be obtained for admission.

The Taylor Institution and University Galleries form a stately pile of buildings at the junction of St. Giles' and Beaumont streets, immediately opposite the Randolph hotel, and were erected in 1841-9 from designs by C. R. Cockerell esq. R.A., D.C.L. at a cost of £49,373: the style adopted is an extremely chaste and elegant variety of Grecian Ionic, reproduced from the temple of Apollo Epicurus, Bassæ, near Phygalia, built about B.C. 430; the structure consists of two lofty wings of three stories each, connected by a central block of lower elevation, in the midst of which is a tall portico with six columns of the Ionic order, supporting a richly-carved pediment, bearing on its summit a sitting figure of Apollo; the whole encloses three sides of a raised quadrangle or forecourt facing Beaumont street, and is generally 240 feet in length by 102 feet wide. The University Galleries, occupying the centre and west wing, were built in part from a legacy of £1,000 bequeathed by Dr. Francis Randolph, principal of St. Alban Hall from 1759 to 1796, for erecting a building to receive art collections and comprise on the ground floor a sculpture gallery and on the first floor an ante-room, fireproof gallery and picture gallery: in the basement are the Pomfret marbles and in other portions of the building are preserved the Chantrey models, the Castellani fictile collection; the Chambers-Hall collection of drawings and etchings by old masters: the celebrated collection of drawings by Raffaele and Michael Angelo, consisting of 277 examples, purchased for £7,000; the Fox-Strangways, Guise and Penrose collections of old and modern masters; the Turner collection of drawings and sketches, 40 of which were presented in 1861 by Professor Ruskin M.A.; an extensive collection of portraits and many valuable casts from the antique. Attached to the Galleries are the Ruskin Drawing School, founded and endowed by Professor Ruskin in 1872 with a sum of £5,000, and the Oxford School of Art, carried on in connection with the Central Art Department at Kensington. The Taylor Institution is contained in the east wing, the principal front of which, facing St. Giles, is relieved by four detached Ionic pillars supporting a deep continuous entablature, on which are placed four heroic statues, personifying Germany, France, Italy and Spain: this institution was founded through a bequest of Sir Robert Taylor knt. architect and sculptor, who died in 1788, for the erection of a suitable building and the establishment of a foundation for the teaching of European languages: the interior contains six lecture and class rooms, a spacious library 40 feet square and a superintendent's residence; the leading periodicals of France, Germany and Italy are taken in and may be read in the library, which is open free to members of the University and to literary persons, not being members of the University, by special permission; connected with the Institution are four Teacherships of Modern European Languages, a Scholarship and an exhibition; the general direction is in the hands of nine curators, who are also charged with the application of funds arising from a bequest by William, Earl of Ilchester, for the encouragement of the study of the Polish and other Slavonic languages: 1. by the delivery of lectures and 2. by the bestowal of prizes or exhibitions.

The Indian Institute, now in the course of erection at the corner of Holywell street and Broad street, on a site purchased from the Warden and Fellows of Merton College, was first projected in 1875 by Mr. Monier Williams, Boden Professor of Sanscrit, who, in the autumn of that year and again in the succeeding year, undertook a journey to India for the purpose of obtaining the sympathy and aid of the Indian people and government in the establishment, within the university, of an institution specially devoted to Indian studies: this enterprise met with considerable encouragement, and the proposal has since received the approval and support of Her Majesty the Empress of India, H.R.H. the Prince of Wales and other distinguished persons, and the subscriptions now (1883) amount to more than £22,000. Of the six houses lately removed, one, standing at the corner, known for many years as "Seal's Coffee House," and more recently the residence of the late Professor Donkin, was built by Sir John Vanbrugh, the architect of the Clarendon building; the new structure is from the designs of Mr. Basil Champneys, of London, and will be constructed of Taynton stone in the Elizabethan style: the main entrance will be in Broad street and at the north-west angle, at the junction of the two streets, there will be an octagonal tower; the interior will contain, in the basement, lavatories, kitchen, store-room &c. and on the ground floor will be three lecture rooms, porter's lodge and vestibule: on the first floor a fire-proof library with five Oriel windows overlooking Broad street, a small typical Indian museum and rooms for the curator: on the second floor a continuation of these departments, with rooms for an assistant curator and above this, bedrooms; when completed and in working order the Institute will, as opportunity offers, invite distinguished Indian administrators, able Orientalists and Indologists of all nationalities as well as eminent natives of India who may visit this country, to deliver addresses in its lecture rooms or library, where conferences and social gatherings will occasionally be held with a view to more united action in arousing an interest in oriental subjects and in making England and India better acquainted with each other. It will also aim at drawing together and assisting the selected candidates for the Civil Service of India, who are now required to reside at a University, and it will take under its special charge all native students from India who occasionally matriculate at Oxford, and who are likely hereafter to frequent the University in greater numbers than they have hitherto done.

The Oxford Union Society's Rooms are situated between Cornmarket and New Inn Hall streets, and are accessible from either. The Society was founded in 1823 as the "United Debating Society," and its meetings were at first held in the rooms of the members. Part of the present site, with a large dwelling house standing thereon, were eventually purchased and converted to the use of the Society in 1858: in 1857 a large Debating Room was erected, and a writing room and library were added in 1863; more recently coffee and smoking rooms have been opened. In the year 1870 the premises were further enlarged by the purchase of a house and large garden on the west formerly in the occupation of the late Professor Wall, on which a new and more spacious Debating Room of brick with stone dressings was erected from designs by Alfred Waterhouse esq. A.R.A. The buildings now include, in addition, a fine library (the former debating room), 47 by 33 feet and 62 feet high, adorned with frescoes from the history of King Arthur, by Rossetti, Riviere and others, a smaller library, a spacious writing room, with smoking room above, magazine and newspaper rooms, lavatories, steward's rooms and other offices, while the northern portion of the site is laid out as a garden with a well-kept lawn and shady trees: the library now contains about 15,000 volumes, and there are on the books more than 1,000 subscribing members: many of the most distinguished men of the present century have at various times been Presidents of the Society, the privileges of which are also extended to members of the Cambridge and Durham Union Societies and of the Dublin Historical Society, and, on the introduction of a member, to strangers residing in Oxford for a limited period.

The Botanic Gardens, formerly called the Physic Gardens, occupy the site of the ancient Jews' Cemetery of the twelfth century and consist of about five acres, situated on the banks of the Cherwell, nearly opposite Magdalen College: the gardens were founded July 25, 1632, by Henry Danvers, Earl of Danby, and were completed in 1633, at a cost of £500, the ground being raised to preserve it from floods and the site enclosed by a high wall: the rusticated Italian gateway with its statues of Charles I. and II. is said to have been designed by Inigo Jones. In 1728 Dr. W. Sherard bequeathed to the University his library and valuable herbarium and increased the endowment of the professorship of botany, which is in the gift of the College of Physicians. Dillenius, Sibthorp, Morison and Fielding also bequeathed their collections to the gardens, of which that of Fielding alone consisted of 70,000 specimens; these, with an extensive botanical library, lecture rooms and laboratories, are contained in buildings on either side of the gateway, with a residence for the Professor, and on the east side are arranged the various conservatories and plant houses; extensive additions were made to the gardens in 1877.

St. Catherine's Club for unattached Students is at the East end of Broad street, and occupies premises anciently constituting a chapel, hexagonal in plan, formed out of one of the bastions of the old city wall and dedicated to "our lady St. Catherine:" a portion of the structure still remains, including a Perpendicular doorway, above which is a mutilated sculpture in five compartments, three of which are canopied; the figures at either end seem to be intended to represent "the Annunciation," or, as some think, the "Marriage of St. Catherine."

Among the existing remains of extinct academical foundations may be mentioned Black Hall (1361) and Middleton Hall (1663), in St. Giles' street, Kettel Hall (1615) in Broad street, Sand Hall and others in Holywell, and Biham Hall in Merton street, all of which are now private houses: one window of the refectory, together with the crypt of Tackley Hall, now forms part of the premises occupied by Mr. Boffin, in the High street; the crypt of Knapp Hall, now a wine cellar, is at the top of St. Aldate's street, and in New Inn Hall street still stands the gateway of St. Mary's College, founded by letters patent, December 14th, 1435, and dissolved in the reign of Elizabeth.

The new University Boat house, situated on the Berkshire side of the river, some distance below the Cherwell, was erected in 1881, in place of the previous building, unfortunately consumed by fire almost immediately after its erection; the lower storey is constructed of brick with stone dressings, and has on the north side a spacious balustraded terrace, in the centre of which rises a picturesque gabled building of brick and timber work, with Eastern and Western wings, in the later English Domestic style; the lower storey is used for the reception of boats, and the first floor contains dressing and other rooms; the surrounding enclosure is laid out as a garden and adjacent are tennis lawns. On the opposite side of the river above the Cherwell, are moored the various college barges, one or two of which formerly belonged to certain of the London City Companies; these serve as aquatic clubs, and are arranged within as reading and dressing rooms; the largest and most conspicuous is the University barge, the head quarters of the Oxford University Boat Club, which contains portraits of distinguished oarsmen, and the Presidential chair, made from a section of the victorious boat of 1843, when Oxford defeated Cambridge, at Henley, with seven oars, the blades of which are arranged around the back of the chair. The Oxford and Cambridge boat race now takes place just before Easter on the Thames between Putney and Mortlake.

THE COLLEGES AND HALLS.

There are twenty-one colleges and three (independent) halls St. Alban Hall having been in 1882 incorporated with Merton College under the provisions of the New University statutes. The latter are not incorporated bodies, but their members, as regards the University at large, enjoy the same privileges as members of colleges. Each college has a resident head, under one of the various titles of dean, rector, provost, warden, president, master, or principal, but all the heads of halls are styled principals. The head of a college is chosen by the Fellows, except in the instance of Christ Church, the dean of which is nominated by the Crown, and Worcester College, the provost of which society is appointed by the Chancellor of the University, and Keble College, where the warden is appointed by the council. In two of the three halls which still remain, the Principal is appointed by the Chancellor of the University, but in the case of St. Edmund Hall, the Principal is appointed by the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College: all headships are tenable for life. The Fellows, in conjunction with the head of the college, are in all cases the directors of its internal regulation and the managers of the property and estates of the society: among the past or present members of this body the church preferment attached to the college is distributed; usually, though not necessarily, according to senority as vacancies occur; the remaining members of the several colleges are those graduates who maintain their names upon its books, and the other members on the foundation, including scholars (called at Christ Church "junior students," at Magdalen "demies" (semi socii), at Queen's "taberdars," and at Merton "postmasters") (portionistæ), exhibitioners, bible clerks, chaplains, and a few other special officers, varying in different societies, and the commoners, or undergraduates not on the foundation: the title of "servitor," once applied to a certain class of students of Christ Church, is now no longer used: Fellows and scholars are mostly elected by the Head and Fellows, after a competitive examination: fellowships are usually vacated by marriage, and by accession to ecclesiastical preferment or to property of a certain amount, but this condition is now much less stringently observed than formerly; otherwise they are tenable for life: scholarships are now generally tenable for five years: at Christ Church, where there is a Capitular as well as a Collegiate body, the Dean is the head of both, the senior students in the latter case corresponding in some respects to fellows in colleges: in colleges with choirs, singing clerks, choristers and organists are also among the members. The college servants consist of the butler, the manciple or steward, cooks and porters, besides others with no special title, but usually known as "scouts," and there are generally one or more messengers: there are four terms in the year, viz. Michaelmas term, from October 10th to December 17th; Hilary or Lent term, from January 14th to the day before Palm Sunday, except that day should be a festival, when the term ends the Monday following; Easter term, from the Wednesday after Easter Sunday to the Friday before Whit Sunday; and Trinity or Act term, which begins on the day before Whit Sunday and usually ends on the first Tuesday in July, but may be continued beyond that day by congregation: for many professors' lectures, however, and for some other purposes, Easter and Trinity terms are together considered as one.

THE COLLEGES.

University College.

Visitor, The Queen.

University College, traditionally said to have been founded by Alfred the Great in 872, was permanently endowed with a sum of 310 marks under the will of William of Durham Archbishop of Rouen, who died in 1249: little is known of him, except that he was formerly rector of Bishop Wearmouth, and distinguished equally for his learning and wealth, which he thus especially bequeathed for the support of a considerable number of masters of arts. The society first benefitted by the bequest in 1253, and the first statutes bear the date of 1280. An enlarged code was drawn up in 1292 and other revisions took place in 1311 and subsequent years. This body of statutes was in force till 1726, when a disputed election to the headship of the college resulted in the formation of a new code, which remained in force until modified compulsorily by the ordinance of 1854, in consequence of the action of the University Commission: since that time there have been two further alterations in the statutes, one in 1872 and the other in 1881; the income of the college is estimated at £11,526 yearly. The foundation now consists of a Master, twelve Fellows, a Stowell Law Fellow (the endowment for whom was provided by Lady Sidmouth in 1837), seventeen Scholars, and fifteen Exhibitioners. The principal benefactors to the college have been Henry IV.; Walter Skirlaw, Bishop of Durham; Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland; Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester; Sir Simon Bennet, bart.; the Rev. Charles Greenwood; John Radcliffe M.D. and Dr. John Browne. The buildings of this college, situated in the High street, have a frontage of 260 feet, broken by two battlemented towers, with gateways approached by flights of steps, and built in 1800 from a design by Dr. Griffith, afterwards master of the college: the interior is divided into two quadrangles, the first of which, 100 feet square, has on its south side the chapel and hall; the former was restored by the late Sir Gilbert Scott R.A. in 1862, when the roof was renewed, and a new east window inserted; the wood carving was executed by Robert Barker, in 1695, and the north and south windows by Van Linge, in 1641: there are monuments to Sir William Jones M.A. 1794, and to Thomas, son of Sir J. C. Musgrave, bart. 1822. The hall was completed in 1657 and refitted in 1766; it is surrounded by an arcaded wainscotting, prolonged at the upper end into flat triangular canopies with shields, and the walls are hung with numerous valuable portraits. Above the principal gate is a statue of Queen Anne and upon the inner side a statue of James II. one of the only two statues of this king supposed to exist in England, the other being in Whitehall gardens, London: the second quadrangle, about 80 feet square, contains the Master's lodgings, and has above the gate, on the exterior, a statue of Mary, daughter of James II. and consort of William III. and on the side within the court a statue of Dr. John Radcliffe. In the common room are busts of King Alfred, by Wilton, and of William Pitt; and portraits burnt in wood by Dr. Griffiths, of the Earl of Leicester and Henry IV. The new library was built in 1860-1, from designs by the late Sir Gilbert Scott R.A. and is in the Decorated style: it contains fine statues of Lords Eldon and Stowell, who were both members of this college: still more to the west are the new buildings of the college, erected in 1845 from the designs of Sir Charles Barry. The college presents to ten benefices.

Balliol College.

Visitor, The Bishop of London, elected by the College.

Balliol College was founded (by intention) between 1263 and 1269 by John de Balliol of Barnard Castle, Durham, but actually in 1282, by Devorgilla, his widow, who at that date hired old Balliol hall, in Horsemonger (now Broad) street, for the reception of the 16 scholars designated by her deceased husband, fourth in descent from Guy de Balliol, an adherent of the conqueror, and father of John de Balliol, king of Scotland. The statutes of the college were first drawn up by the founders in 1282 and afterwards added to or modified in 1340, 1346 and 1507. The latest statutes given under the authority of the Oxford University Commissioners came into operation in the year 1882. The foundation now consists of a Master, a number of Fellows, varying from eleven to sixteen, thirty-two Scholars and twenty-three Exhibitioners. The buildings of the college, which have been almost entirely rebuilt at a cost of £100,000, are now very extensive: the south front, erected in the time of Henry VI. was wholly rebuilt in 1867-9 in a mixed style of Gothic, under the direction of A. Waterhouse esq. A.R.A. and includes a lofty tower, with groined entrance gateway opening into the first quadrangle, which has the library and chapel on the north, and the old hall, now a lecture room and undergradnates' library, on the west. The chapel, replacing one built in 1529, is the fourth since the foundation of the college; it was erected in 1856-7 at a cost of £8,000, from designs by Mr. Butterfield, and is in the Decorated style, with bands of white and coloured brickwork: the stained glass from the old chapel has been replaced: the lectern was presented by Dr. Edward Wilson, in the reign of Charles II. and the organ was introduced in 1874: in the ante-chapel are several brasses and other memorials to former members of the college. The library, which adjoins the chapel, was built at two different periods in the fifteenth century and refitted in 1792, and is especially rich in illuminated MSS. and rare editions of the scriptures: a passage from this quadrangle leads to the second quadrangle and the garden, which contains some fine elms, and is bounded on the south by the Fisher buildings, erected in 1769, at a cost of £3,000 and restored in 1877, and by the Master's lodge, and on the west by the buildings erected in 1825 under the direction of Mr. George Basevi, architect, and north of these by a new block, with a gateway tower, built in 1855, from a design by Mr. Salvin. On the north side is the new hall, a magnificent apartment 90 by 36 feet, built in the Decorated style by Mr. Waterhouse: the eastern windows of which flame with heraldry; at the wes end is a spacious gallery and on the walls are numerous fine portraits: in this hall was first performed the "Agamemnon" of Æschylus, revived with so much success in 1880 by the undergradnates of this college, which has for many years enjoyed an unusually high reputation for scholarship and success in the lists of university honours. It presents to seventeen benefices, and has an annual income of £8,463 1s. 4d.

Merton College.

Visitor, The Archbishop of Canterbury.

Merton College was originally founded as a house of support and maintenance "for 20 scholars dwelling in the schools of Oxford, or wheresoever else learning shall happen to flourish," at Malden, in Surrey, in 1264, by Walter de Merton, Bishop of Rochester and Lord Chancellor of England, and ten years afterwards was transferred to Oxford. Its statutes are of peculiar interest and importance, having formed a model for those framed by all succeeding founders of Collegiate bodies, both in this and the sister University of Cambridge; and portions of its buildings are certainly among the most ancient in Oxford. The college is pleasantly situated in the south-east part of the city in the street of the same name, the principal front, re-faced in 1838 by Mr. Blore, being towards the north: in the centre is an embattled tower, with statues of Henry III. and the founder, and an elaborate representation of John the Baptist preaching in the Wilderness, above the gateway; the interior consists of three quadrangles, erected at different periods: the first of which contains, on the left, the warden's lodgings; on the right, the chapel, with its magnificent east window: and on the south side the hall, built in the early part of the fourteenth century, refitted and despoiled in 1800 by Mr. Wyatt, but restored as far as possible to its ancient character, in 1872, under the care of the late Sir Gilbert Scott R.A. at a cost of £4,000; it contains, among other portraits, one of the founder, and another of William Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood, who was some time warden (1645-6). The inner or principal quadrangle is 110 feet by 100 and is a good example of the debased style which prevailed in the reign of James I.; on the south side is a tower displaying four of the five orders of architecture; this quadrangle gives access to the gardens, enclosed on the south by part of the old city wall, beside which is a raised terrace, commanding a remarkably pleasant prospect over the meadows on the banks of the Cherwell. The Emperor of Russia and his sister resided at this college, in the warden's lodgings, when visiting the University in 1814; westward of the hall is the third quadrangle, popularly known as "Mob Quad," and containing on the west and south the unique library, believed to be now the most ancient original library existing in this country; it was built in 1349, and retains the encaustic floor tiling and much of the stained glass then placed. Sixteen additional sets of rooms were erected in 1864 in the rear of the chapel, on the east side of the grove leading through to the meadow from the south side of this quadrangle, from designs by Mr. Butterfield. In the chapel, which is also the parish church of St. John the Baptist, and is more fully treated of under that heading, is a mural monument with bust and inscription, to Sir Thomas Bodley knt. founder of the Bodleian library, ob. 1612; also a marble mural monument to Anthony à Wood, author of "Athenæ Oxonienses," 1695; and another marble monument to the late Bishop of Patteson, of Melanesia, who was a Fellow of the college. The statutes given by the founder in 1270 were in force till the commission of 1854, when they were in a great measure superseded by an ordinance which swept away very many of their provisions, but this has now given place to the new statutes sanctioned by Parliament in May 1881; under which the foundation consists of a Warden, a number of Fellows, which shall not be less than 19, and may be raised to 26; two Chaplains and eighteen or more Postmasters; among the benefactors of this college have been John Wyllyott D.D. chancellor of Exeter, who endowed the portionists or postmasters in 1380, and John Chamber, fellow of Eton College and canon of Windsor, who added one fellowship and two postmasterships for scholars of Eton. The college presents to twenty benefices and has in trust the rectory of Rushall, Wilts. Its annual income is estimated at £17,750 11s. 9d.

Exeter College.

Visitor, The Bishop of Exeter.

Exeter College was founded by Walter de Stapledon, Bishop of Exeter, in 1314, and was originally called Stapledon Hall. Its name was changed to Exeter Hall by Edmund Stafford, Bishop of Exeter, who also revised the founder's statutes in 1404; and in 1566 Sir William Petre, who further reformed the statutes, procured its erection into a college. Charles I. added one Fellowship for Guernsey and Jersey in 1636 and Mrs. Shiers two more in 1700. In 1852 the Society consisted of a Rector and twenty-five Fellows; but by the operations of the University Commission of 1854 it was re-modelled and made to consist of a Rector and fifteen Fellows, twenty-two Scholars and nine Exhibitioners. It has since undergone further change by the new statutes of 1882, and now consists of a Rector and twelve Fellows;

the number of scholars remaining the same as before, unless the funds are found sufficient for a larger number; at present the number of Scholars is twenty-four and of Exhibitioners ten, but the college is directed to set aside a sum for the establishment of a larger number. The college buildings, situated in Turl street and Broad street, have undergone at different times many architectural changes; the principal front in Turl street, rebuilt in 1703 and again in 1833-4 by Mr. Underwood, architect, is 220 feet in length with gables at either end, and in the centre a tall embattled gateway tower of four stories, with a groined porch opening into a spacious quadrangle, containing the hall, chapel, rector's lodgings, and chambers of the fellows and scholars. The chapel, rebuilt in 1857-8 at an expense of £17,000, from the designs of the late Sir George Gilbert Scott R.A. is similar in design to the well-known "Sainte Chapelle" of Paris, and forms a magnificent reproduction of the Early Decorated style; it is about 91 feet in length, 30 wide, and to the groined stone vaulting, 84 feet in height, but the roof rises considerably higher, and has at its western end a lofty flèche, the height of which, to the summit of the vane, is 150 feet; the east end is apsidal, with richly stained windows, and beneath these is an arcading filled with figures of the Apostles and various emblems worked in glass mosaic by J. B. Philip, of London, from designs by Salviati; an extremely beautiful screen of stone and open iron work separates the chapel from the ante-chapel, which, 20 feet in length, forms the western bay; in a projecting gallery at this end is placed the organ, reached by a stair in a turret at the south-west angle: the eagle lectern was presented by the Rev. John Vivian, in 1637; on the south side is a memorial window presented by the Rev. H. F. Tozer, a former fellow, and another erected to the memory of the Rev. W. Sewell D.D. many years a fellow. The date of the former chapel was 1624. The hall, built in 1618 by Sir John Acland, was restored in 1848 and 1872; it has a high-pitched open timber roof, and contains a portrait of Walter de Stapledon, the founder, painted and presented in 1789 by the Rev. W. Peters B.C.L.; and others of Charles I. Sir John Acland, Sir William Petre, Mrs. Shiers and many other benefactors; beneath the hall is the crypt of St. Mildred's church, removed c. 1488. The library, situated in the Fellows' garden, was erected in 1856, from designs by Sir G. G. Scott, and is a picturesque building in the Early Decorated style, with a battlemented tower of two stories, surmounted by four crocketed pinnacles; on the north side of the chapel is the new quadrangle, built in 1856, also under the direction of Sir G. G. Scott, with a northern façade including a gateway tower, facing Broad street. The garden is pleasantly laid out and, although in a central part of the city, is open to the east, where a terrace commands a view of some of the principal buildings of the University. This college presents to thirteen benefices and its annual income is £14,538 16s.

Oriel College.

Visitor, The Queen.

Oriel College, founded by Edward II. in 1326, at the suggestion of Adam de Brome, his almoner, is situated in Oriel street and consists of two quadrangles, of which the south and west sides of the first were rebuilt about the year 1620, on the north side of this quadrangle are the provost's lodgings, on the east the hall and entrance to the chapel and on the south and west are the rooms of the fellows and students. The second quadrangle consists of distinct and somewhat irregular buildings, of which those on the eastern side were built in 1719, by Dr. John Robinson, Bishop of London; the western wing was erected by Dr. Carter, provost 1708-27, and in 1817, an additional block was built on the south side; the principal front faces the east or Canterbury gate of Christ Church, and has an embattled gateway tower bearing the arms of Charles I. and a fine oriel window over the entrance; the hall, built in 1637 and repaired in 1826 and again in 1838, is approached through a porch, reached by a flight of steps, above which, in canopied niches, are statues of the Virgin Mary and of Edward II. and III.; the interior is 50 feet long by 20 wide, and has one of the finest timbered roofs in Oxford; it contains portraits of Edward II. on his throne, by Hudson; Queen Anne, by Dahl; the Duke of Beaufort, by Soldi; Bishop Butler; Sir Walter Raleigh; William Pierrepont, Earl of Kingston; and others, together with two very curious cups, one given by the founder and the other by John Carpenter, Bishop of Worcester, in 1476. The chapel, begun about 1637 and finished in 1642, was restored in 1678, 1818 and 1833, and has a brass lectern, given in 1654 by Mr. Napier: there are monuments to Henry Edmunds D.C.L. 1746; and Dr. George Carter, provost and benefactor; the stained east window of the chapel is by Peckitt, of York, and represents The Presentation of Christ in the Temple. Northward of the quadrangle is the garden court, at the end of which is the library, built by Wyatt in 1788 and one of the best examples of the Ionic order in Oxford; under the library is the common room, containing a valuable collection of portraits. The first body of statutes appears to have been granted by Adam de Brome himself in 1326 and a second code to have been added in the same year by Bishop de Burghursh, of Lincoln. A few ordinances were imposed in 1330. Bishop de Burghursh's statutes governed the college till 1726, when a disputed election brought the question to the law courts and the original statutes were restored after having been in abeyance for exactly four centuries. Like other colleges, it received an ordinance from the University Commissioners in 1854, but its elections had previously been so much more open than those of many other colleges that its constitution did not undergo so decided a change as that which occurred in some other societies. It is now governed by statutes framed under the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge Act of 1877, and the foundation consists of a Provost, fourteen Fellows, ten Scholars, four Exhibitioners and two Bible Clerks, and there are nine other Exhibitions not on the foundation. The college presents to thirteen benefices, and has an estimated annual income of £16,649.

Queen's College.

Visitor, The Archbishop of York.

Queen's College, situated on the north side of the High street, opposite University College, was founded in 1340 by Robert de Eglesfield, chaplain and confessor to Philippa, queen of Edward III., from whom its name is derived; and successive queens of this kingdom have been its especial patronesses. The buildings consist of two quadrangles of unequal size, separated by the hall and chapel, between which a lofty vaulted corridor unites the two. The principal front facing the High street, built in 1750-6, presents, at either end, the southern termination of the east and west sides of the great quadrangle; these are of three stories, and terminate in an enriched pediment, surmounted by fine statues in stone, of Jupiter, Apollo, Geography, Mathematics, Medicine and Religion; a continuous rusticated arcade connects the two wings, in the centre of which, approached by a flight of steps, is a gateway of similar character, and above it an open cupola, supported by columns, containing a statue of Queen Caroline, consort of George II.; the entire front was renovated during the vacations of 1845 and 1846: the southern, or great quadrangle, begun in 1710, is entered immediately from the street, and has on the east and west sides students' rooms, and on the north side the chapel and hall; and a vaulted arcade, carried on a series of rusticated arches, surrounds every side but the north: the hall and chapel form a continuous pile of building and have a southern façade of considerable stateliness, divided by pilasters of the Doric order, supporting an entablature and balustrading; on either side of the archway dividing them are two circular pillars of the same order, sustaining a pediment, above which rises a bell-turret with a cupola of the Corinthian order; the chapel is 100 feet long by 30 wide, and the ceiling, painted by Sir James Thornhill, represents the "Ascension"; the altar-piece is a copy by Cranke of "La Notte" (the Night), Correggio's celebrated picture in the Dresden gallery: the east end is apsidal, and its centre window is filled with a copy, in stained glass, by Joshua Price, of Carlo Maratti's "Holy Family;" the other windows are filled with glass by Van Linge, dating from 1635, and removed from the former chapel; the eagle lectern dates from 1662; the screen, of fine polished oak, has carvings by Grinling Gibbons; above it is a gallery, containing a large and very powerful organ: there are brasses to Dr. Robert Langton, who enlarged the chapel, c. 1518; Henry Robinson, provost, and Bishop of Carlisle, 1616; and Henry Airay S.T.P. provost, 1616: the hall, 60 feet by 30 feet, was built in 1704-14, and is said to have been designed by Sir Christopher Wren; the walls are hung with portraits of the founder, Queen Philippa, Edward the Black Prince, Henry V. Charles I. and his queen, Queen Anne, Queen Caroline, Queen Charlotte, Addison, and various others; in the gallery at the west end of the hall are portraits of six queens, given to the college by George Clark D.C.L.; with others of Edward III. Henry V. &c.: the whole of the south side of the hall and chapel has been restored with Bath stone; the northern quadrangle consists of students' rooms only, and is bounded on two sides by Queen's lane: the library, 123 feet by 30 feet and 55 feet in height, is situated west of the hall; it was erected in 1692-4, and contains a large orrery, presented to the college in 1763, and is particularly rich in heraldic and genealogical MSS; the ancient deeds relating to the college property are also very numerous; and the library contains besides, two ancient portraits on glass of Henry V. and Cardinal Beaufort, and portraits of Charles I. and Queen Charlotte: in the buttery of the college is a drinking horn, said to have been presented to the society by Queen Philippa, and remarkable both for its antiquity and beauty; it is richly mounted in silver gilt and has the word "Wasseyl" inscribed three times on each hoop. The members of this college are called to dinner every day by the sound of a trumpet, a custom coeval with the foundation; another custom still observed with much ceremony, and always attracting a large number of spectators, takes place every Christmas day, when a huge boar's head, crowned, and "bedecked with bays and rosemary," is carried in procession into the hall, preceded by the Provost, fellows, and College Choir, singing the well-known carol "Caput apri defero"; on New Year's day, dinner being ended, the bursar goes in succession to each fellow at table and presents him with a needle and thread, saying, "Take this and be thrifty," as a memorial of their founder, the words "Aiguille et fil" (needle and thread), from which the custom is supposed to have been derived, forming a rebus on the name "Eglesfield." This college was originally an essentially North Country college, and was founded especially for the purpose of theological study as well as to ensure a succession of masses for the souls of the founder and his family, Edward III. Queen Philippa and all benefactors. Its statutes were in some measure modelled on those of Merton and Oriel, but are full of minute directions relating to quaint and trifling observances, many of which have long been obsolete. In 1736 the foundation received an important addition by the devise of lands in the counties of Kent and Berks, for the endowment of eight fellowships, four scholarships, and four exhibitioners. The Michel foundation, however, as this addition to the original society was called, from the name of its founder, John Michel esq. all but disappeared by consolidation with the original foundation, under an ordinance framed by the University commissioners in 1858. By the new statutes of 1882, the constitution of the college has again been re-modelled, and will consist for the present of a Provost, from fourteen to sixteen fellows, of whom nine or ten are official; and from twenty to twenty-five scholars, eight of these retaining the ancient name of "Taberdars," and four or five being called "Eglesfield scholars," who must be natives of Cumberland or Westmoreland; besides two Bible clerks, a large number of exhibitioners and the usual college officers. The college presents to twenty-four benefices, and has an estimated yearly income of £15,286 18s. 10d.

New College.

Visitor, The Bishop of Winchester.

New College, placed in a secluded position between Holywell street and Queen's lane, was founded 5th March, 1380, under letters patent of Richard II. issued June 30th, in the preceding year, by William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester and Lord Chancellor, and the society solemnly entered into possession of the buildings 14th April, 1386. Wykeham also founded a college at Winchester in 1387, whence on its completion in 1393, the vacancies in the fellowships in this college were to be filled up. The foundation consisted originally of a Warden, seventy Fellows and Scholars, ten Chaplains, three Clerks, and sixteen Choristers. Of the seventy described as "Fellows and Scholars" all were elected from the foundation of Winchester College; those of the founder's kin becoming actual fellows at once and others being elected fellows after being scholars for two years. By the new Statutes framed by the Commissioners of the University of Oxford in 1881 and approved by the Queen in Council, May 3rd, 1882, provision is made for a Warden, Fellows, and Scholars; the fellowships being of three classes, viz., "Professor-Fellowships," "Tutorial-Fellowships" and "Ordinary-Fellowships," and the Scholarships of two classes, Winchester and Open Scholarships. The Professor-Fellowships are to be five in number; the Tutorial-Fellowships are not to exceed ten in number; and the Ordinary-Fellowships are to be not less than fourteen, nor more than will make up the whole number of fellowships to thirty-six. The Winchester Scholarships are to be filled by the election of boys receiving education in the school of Winchester College, no distinction being made between members of the foundation and boys not members thereof. The Winchester Scholarships are to be so many as will enable six scholars to be elected in each year. The Open Scholarships are to be open to general competition, and to be so many in number as to allow four Scholarships and no more to be filled up in each year. The buildings consist chiefly of three quadrangles, in the first of which, 168 by 129 feet square, entered by the principal gateway in New College lane, are the hall, chapel, library, and warden's lodgings. A third storey was added to the building of this quadrangle in 1675; a short vaulted passage, on the left of the gateway, leads to the ante-chapel, 80 feet by 36 feet, and divided into three aisles, supported by lofty pillars; the great west window of seven lights, contains paintings of The Nativity, with the four cardinal and three Christian virtues, by Jervais, from designs by Sir Joshua Reynolds; and some of the surrounding windows still retain the glass placed in them by the founder; besides various mural monuments, there are on the floor of the ante-chapel not less than twenty-five brasses, including a very fine brass, with effigy, fully vested, to Thomas de Cranleigh, Warden, Archbishop of Dublin, 1389-95. The choir, or chapel proper, 100 feet long by 35 feet wide and 65 feet high, is separated from the ante-chapel by a screen, above which is placed a magnificent organ, built by Willis in 1875, and containing 33 stops and nearly 3,000 pipes; the very fine stained windows on the south side are Flemish, and are supposed to have been executed by pupils of Rubens: the windows on the north side, representing prophets and apostles, are by Peckett, of York, and were placed in 1763 and 1774; the east end is entirely filled with four tiers of canopied niches, and has alto-relievos, by Westmacott, above the Communion table, representing The Salutation, The Nativity, The Descent from the Cross, The Resurrection and the Ascension. In a recess in the wall on the north side of the chapel is preserved the pastoral staff of the founder, elaborately worked in silver-gilt and enamelled, and nearly 7 feet high; the chapel was partly restored in 1789 by Wyatt, and in 1870-80 the roof was completely renewed, a new and elaborate organ case constructed and the stall work restored under the direction of the late Sir Gilbert Scott R.A.; westward of the chapel are the cloisters, surrounding an area of 175 feet by 85 feet, consecrated as a burial-place for the college October 9th, 1400, by Robert Calder, Bishop of Dunkeld; these have a singular ribbed roof of walnut wood and contain numerous mural monuments. The hall adjoins the chapel on the east, and is 79 feet long by 33 feet wide, with a height of 50 feet; the screen and wainscotting were the gift of Archbishop Warham, in 1504; and both this and the windows are adorned with shields of arms. The original roof, constructed in 1386, was taken down about 1795, and replaced by a flat covered ceiling, utterly out of keeping with the architecture of so noble a room. In 1866, this was replaced by a magnificent oak roof, from timber grown on the college estates, and very effective stained glass placed in the windows, at a total cost of £6,000. On the walls are hung many portraits of college worthies, including the founder, William of Wykeham, Archbishop Chichley, Bishops Waynflete, Ken and others; the muniment tower, kitchen and bursary, remain for the most part as first erected; the library, 70 feet by 22 feet, consists of two apartments, and was refitted by Mr. Wyatt. The garden court, built after the manner of Versailles, is terminated by an iron palisade and gates, 130 feet in length, said to have been brought from Canons, the once splendid seat of the Duke of Chandos. The gardens, charmingly retired, are beautifully planted with a large variety of trees and shrubs; in the centre is a lofty mound, thickly grown with deciduous trees and evergreens, and on the south and east side the lawns are shaded by avenues of ancient limes and magnificent chestnuts; the north and east sides are bounded by the old city wall, with its crenellated bastions, postern and "alure" or parapet walk, still intact; at the south end is an Ionic temple; north of the chapel is a slip of ground called the "Slipe," at the end of which stands the tower; it is of five stages with an embat tled parapet and angle turret, and contains a very fine peal of 10 bells, dated respectively, 1712 (2), 1655, 1703, 1672 and the rest 1723; between the old city wall and Holywell street has been formed the third quadrangle, the buildings of which, so far as at present erected, occupy the north side only, with a frontage in Holywell street of 273 feet; they are of four stories, in the Perpendicular style, and were built in 1872-5, at a cost of £20,000, from designs by the late Sir Gilbert Scott R.A. During 1882, extensive alterations were made in the kitchen wing, chiefly with a view of restoring the kitchen to its original proportions and refitting its various offices; this work has been accomplished under the direction of Messrs. Wilkinson and Moore, architects. The college presents to forty benefices, and the warden to one, the vicarage of Colerne, Wilts; the estimated annual income of the college is £30,441 17s. 5d.

Lincoln College.

Visitor, The Bishop of Lincoln.

Lincoln College was founded by Richard Flemyng, Bishop of Lincoln, in 1427, but in 1479 Thomas Scot, better known by his surname—Rotheram, Archbishop of York, became so considerable a benefactor as to be denominated a second founder. It is situated in Turl street, in the space between All Saints' Church and Exeter College and preserves, more than any other collegiate edifice, its original character, being now the only college in Oxford to which a third storey has not been added. It consists of two quadrangles; the northern, 80 feet square, entered from the street by an embattled gateway tower, contains the hall, 42ft. long by 25ft. wide, with a louvre on the roof; it was built in 1436 and repaired in 1701 and 1835 and contains portraits of the founders and of Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham, formerly rector of the college; Dr. John Williams, Archbishop of York, 1641-50; Sir Nathaniel Lloyd; the Rev. E. Tatham D.D. and the Rev. J. Radford D.D. former rectors, as well as of other college worthies; here also is the library, fitted up in 1739 at the cost of Sir N. Lloyd, and containing a MS. copy of Wyclif's Bible; the rector's lodgings and the common room; a new wing, containing fifteen sets of rooms, was erected in 1882 eastward of this quadrangle, from designs by T. G. Jackson esq. M.A. The main building runs east and west, abutting upon the ancient dining-hall, and on the site of "the Grove," with a wing extending at right angles to Brasenose lane. These replace a building erected in 1759, the rooms of which had become so dilapidated, besides being very small, that it was necessary to remove the whole; the new block contains, in addition, lodgings for a Fellow, with servants' offices and other adjuncts, including extensive premises in the basement. The old kitchen is joined to the offices in the basement by a subway, and these will be found most convenient additions to the culinary department and storage rooms. The new wing consists of a ground floor and first and second storeys, approached by three staircases. Nearest the old building the gateway opens into a passage which traverses the structure from north to south. Over this is an elegant oriel window of novel design supported on handsome moulded corbels. On either side there is a double gable, the windows of the second storey having bold pediments. The north front is much plainer in design and is treated somewhat differently. Where the two buildings meet there previously existed a window, which was blocked up on the exterior and concealed within by the panelling erected by Lord Crewe in 1701; the original tracery of the old work remains, however, in a perfect state of preservation. The total cost has been about £9,000. The south front is faced with Handborough stone, and the north with red brick coursed with ashlar. All the dressings are of stone from the Clipsham quarries, the staircase being of Portland and the landings of Castlehill flags. A range of buildings for lavatories &c. has also been erected in the Fellows' gardens and is approached by a corridor from the old Grove gardens. In the inner court, 70 feet square, is the chapel, 62 feet long by 26 feet wide, erected in 1631 at the expense of Dr. Williams, Bishop of Lincoln and afterwards Archbishop of York; the ceiling is of cedar, embellished with the arms of the founders and principal benefactors; the screen, also of cedar, is richly carved; the windows are filled with rich and brilliant glass, said to have been brought from Flanders in 1629-31 by Archbishop Williams; the four windows on the northern side contain figures of twelve prophets and four on the south side the twelve apostles; the east window is divided into six compartments, in which are represented subjects from the Old and New Testaments, consisting of six types with their anti-types, viz.: 1. The Creation of Man and the Nativity of Christ; 2. The Israelites passing the Red Sea and the Baptism of Jesus Christ; 3. The Passover and the Institution of the Lord's Supper; 4. The Brazen Serpent in the Wilderness and Christ on the Cross; 5. Jonah issuing from the Whale and the Resurrection; 6. Elijah in the Fiery Chariot and the Ascension. The common room was newly fitted up in 1816, and in 1818 the whole front was repaired and improved by the introduction of appropriate Gothic windows. The Rev. John Wesley M.A. founder of the Methodist connexion, was elected to a Fellowship here from Christ Church, March 17, 1726; the rooms occupied by him when resident are between the first and second quadrangles: he died in 1791. The foundation of this college has undergone less change than some others at the hands of the University Commissioners. Its fellowships, with the exception of one which was restricted to the diocese of Wells, were previously open to the old dioceses of York and Lincoln, which comprised nearly half of England. All the fellowships and most of the scholarships are now open without limitation. The present foundation, in accordance with statutes enacted in 1855, consists of a rector, ten fellows and fourteen scholars; other scholarships, added from time to time from the proceeds of two suspended fellowships, make the whole existing number up to twenty-two. The college presents to nine benefices, and its yearly income is estimated at £7,778 3s. 3d.

All Souls College.

Visitor, the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The College of All Souls of the Faithful Departed, of Oxford, commonly called All Souls College, was founded by King Henry VI. by a patent of foundation bearing date 20th May, 1438. With him was associated as co-founder Henry Chichele, Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, by whom the college was endowed and its statutes issued, 20th April, 1443. The college was expressly declared to be founded for study and prayer, not only for all the souls of the faithful departed, but especially for the souls of Henry V. King of England and France, of Thomas Duke of Clarence and of other noble and faithful subjects of the realm who died in the French wars; and otherwise to promote the study of philosophy and arts, of theology and of the civil and canon law. To this end its statutes required that of its forty Fellows twenty-four should graduate in arts and philosophy, and be called "artists," and sixteen in civil law to be called "jurists." John Druell, Archdeacon of Exeter, and Roger Keyes, both afterwards fellows, were the architects of the college, which is situated on the north side of the High street, westward of Queen's College, and consists of three quadrangles. The principal front, 194 feet in length, in the High street, is of two stories, with an embattled parapet, and has entrances to the east and west quadrangles, the latter being through a gateway tower with battlements and an angle turret; over the entrance arch are three canopied niches, containing statues of the founder and of Henry VI. and a bas-relief of the Resurrection. The old or western quadrangle, 124 feet by 72, remains nearly in the same state as when first erected; on its northern side is the chapel, approached by an exquisitely vaulted passage way at the north-west corner, leading to the ante-chapel, 70 feet by 30, on the pavement of which are brasses to Philip Polton B.C.L. with effigy in cope, 1461; Richard Speckynton LL.B. fellow, with effigy in academicals, 1490; and David Lloyde LL.B. and Thomas Baker S.C.L. with demi-effigies, 1510; and there are mural monuments to Dr. Clarke and to Dr. Edward Legge, warden, and Bishop of Oxford, 1827. A heavy screen of Italian character, erected about 1664, at the cost of Sir William Portman bart. separates the ante-chapel from the choir, the dimensions of which are nearly the same. Between 1664 and 1715 the chapel was extensively renovated in the Italian style, the open-timbered roof converted into a flat ceiling and decorated and the mutilated reredos plastered over and painted by Robert Streater with a fresco of the "Last Judgment"; in 1715-7 this was obliterated by a painting of the "Assumption of the Founder," by Sir James Thornhill; and Raphael Mengs' fine picture of the "Noli me tangere," set up as an altar-piece, with costly pilasters of marble on either side supporting a pediment. In 1872-6 the chapel was carefully restored under the direction of Sir Gilbert Scott R.A. when the stalls were cleared of paint, the fine hammer-beam roof again opened and decorated in gold and colour, the whole of the incongruous work at the east end removed, and the magnificent reredos, a splendid work of the fifteenth century, which had been concealed behind the frescoes and forgotten, completely restored, chiefly by the munificence of the late Earl Bathurst, a fellow of the college. This superb work, executed at a cost of £35,000, is probably the finest of its kind in this country: it consists chiefly of three tiers of elaborately canopied niches, containing thirty-five statues, embracing apostles, fathers of the church, ecclesiastics, kings and nobles; and besides these nearly one hundred statuettes, comprising all the leading characters in Old and New Testament History; immediately over the communion table is the Crucifixion, and above all, in the apex of the roof, a group representing the Last Judgment; the whole of these figures, exquisitely carved, are the work of Mr. E. C. Geflowski, of London. In the east quadrangle is the hall, begun in 1729, from the designs and under the superintendence of Dr. Clarke: it contains a large picture of the Finding of the Law, by Sir James Thornhill, and numerous portraits, among which are those of Henry VI., Archbishop Chichele, Archbishop Sheldon, Archbishop Vernon, Colonel Codrington, founder of the library, Sir William Blackstone, Sir Christopher Wren, Young the poet, and many others; and there are also here busts of Chichele, and Heber, Bishop of Calcutta. Adjoining the hall are the buttery and kitchen; in the former is a bust of Giles Bennett, manciple, and another of Hawksmoor, architect; here is also a very curious and ancient salt-cellar of silver gilt, supported by an armed figure, given to the college by a descendant of the Chichele family. A passage way between the hall and chapel conducts to the great or north quadrangle, 172 feet by 155, built in 1720-60 from the designs of Nicholas Hawksmoor; the eastern side, comprising the common room and fellows' chambers, is relieved in the centre by two lofty embattled towers, with crocketed pinnacles, in a debased Gothic style, each surmounted by a species of lantern of two stages; the towers are united by a screen or façade of the same character, and, from their singularity, form a well-known feature in all views of Oxford; on the west side extends a piazza, connecting the chapel and library, with a curious but picturesque towered gateway in the centre, leading to the Radcliffe square; on the north side is the library, about 200 feet long by 33 wide, built in 1720-60 under the direction of Sir Nathaniel Lloyd and Dr. Clarke, from a bequest of £10,000 by Col. Christopher Codrington, fellow of All Souls, and governor of the Leeward Islands, who is buried in the ante-chapel; it contains upwards of 60,000 volumes and is surrounded on three sides by a gallery above the cases, in which are 24 busts of some of the most eminent fellows of the college, cast in bronze by Sir Henry Cheere, knight; in the centre is a planetarium, kept in motion by machinery, and a statue of Colonel Codrington, also by Cheere. The ante-library has some ancient stained glass, coeval with the foundation of the college. This library is especially rich in works relating to jurisprudence, for the particular study of which a reading room, with access from the Radcliffe square, was built in 1867. At the eastern end of the library is a fine statue in marble by Bacon, of Sir William Blackstone kt. Chief Justice, removed here from the ante-chapel. The warden's residence, a modern mansion, adjoins the east quadrangle, and has a frontage towards High street, and a garden in the rear. The college has long been and will still remain a foundation different in character from the other colleges in the university. Under the new statutes of the college, which came into operation May 3, 1882, the Professoriate in the Faculty of Law will be largely endowed from its revenues, and its fellowships will be mainly devoted to the encouragement of the studies of law and modern history, and partly also in aid of research. Provision is made by these statutes for a warden, fifty fellows, two chaplains and four bible clerks, but there are no other undergraduates. The college presents to eighteen benefices, and its annual income is estimated at £18,086 18s. 9d.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE.

Visitor, The Bishop of Winchester.

Magdalen College was founded in June, 1458, by William of Wayntlete, bishop of Winchester, to whom the buildings of the suppressed hospital of St. John the Baptist were granted by Henry VI. in 1457: but these being too small for the reception of the society, he resolved to enlarge them, and the foundation stone of the new college was laid 5th May, 1473, by William Tybard B.D. at that time governor of the new society, in the presence and with the aid of Robert Toly, bishop of St. David's; and the work of erection was completed in about seven years. The college is beautifully situated at the eastern extremity of the city, and is bounded on that side by a branch of the river Cherwell, the main stream of which, passing under Magdalen bridge turns to the right, and winds through the meadows beyond: on the south the buildings extend to the High street, and on the other sides they are shut in by the premises of the college school, and by Magdalen grove. The extreme length of the college from north to south is 570 feet and from east to west 330 feet; it comprises at present three quadrangles, the principal of which has double sets of apartments on three sides, and is surrounded by a cloister. The entrance to the first court is through an elegant gateway in the Decorated style, erected in 1844, at a cost of £600, from a design by Pugin; on the left are the President's lodgings, and immediately opposite extends the west front, an elevation of singular richness and variety, comprising the west end of the chapel with its highly wrought porch, the cloister tower, and the great gateway or founder's tower, with its beautiful two-storied oriel, flanked on either side by two niches, containing statues of Wayntlete, St. Mary Magdalen, Henry VI. and St. John the Baptist. In the south-western angle of this court, which is known as St. John's Quadrangle, is an ancient canopied stone pulpit, from which a sermon was annually preached on the festival of St. John the Baptist, a custom long discontinued. The chapel, the first stone of which was laid by the founder, May 5th, 1474, in plan resembles the letter T; the ante-chapel, a building of considerable dimensions, forming the transverse portion, which is separated from the choir by a fine stone screen, above which is placed the organ, a magnificent instrument, greatly improved in 1855; the great west window contains a representation of "the Last Judgment," painted from a design by Christopher Schwartz, and restored in 1794 by Egginton, by whom also the other windows in the ante-chapel were executed: in 1635 the interior of the chapel was fitted up according to the prevailing taste of those times and the choir was then paved with black and white marble; but in 1649, the building, and especially its stained glass, was seriously injured by the unrestrained violence of the Parliamentary troops; in 1833 it was restored to somewhat of its primitive magnificence, under the direction of Mr. Cottenham, at a cost of about £18,000; in 1857-60, the windows of the choir were refilled with brilliant stained glass, and in 1864-5, a series of statues was added to the fine canopied reredos: the altar-piece is a very fine painting of Christ bearing the Cross, variously attributed to Moralez, a Spanish artist, to Ribalta and others, and over it is a sculptured representation of Christ appearing to Mary in the Garden, by Sir Francis Chantrey R.A.; on the north side of the communion table is a small chapel, containing the alabaster table tomb of Richard Patten, father of the founder, removed here in 1833, from the destroyed church of Wayntlete, in Lincolnshire, the birth-place of the founder. The hall, entered from the south-east angle of the cloisters, is a grand and well-proportioned room, built in a line with, though not on the same level as, the chapel, and has an oriel window on the north side near the high table; its extreme length, including the gallery and screen, is 73 feet and its width 30½ feet, the passage under the screen being 8 feet wide; the walls are lined with oak wainscot, put up in 1541, and adorned with shields of arms; at the upper end the space is divided into nine compartments, six of which represent scenes in the life of St. Mary Magdalen: the windows are filled with heraldic glass: the hall contains a fine picture of Mary Magdalen, by Guercino, and portraits of the founder, Prince Rupert, Cardinal Wolsey, Henry, Prince of Wales, John Hough, president, and Bishop of Worcester, Archbishop Boulter, Dr. Sacheverell, formerly a fellow of the college, Addison, Dr. Hammond, the celebrated divine and commentator, and many others. The chapel and hall together form the south side of the great quadrangle: on the west side rises the founder's tower, which has in and adjoining it a suite of state apartments, some years since carefully restored and magnificently fitted, and the library; the remaining sides are occupied by students' rooms, the whole square being surrounded by a wide cloister, built in 1473, with buttresses surmounted by curious sculptured figures, usually called "hieroglyphics," the exact purport of which has been much discussed, but is still undecided. The library is a noble room, lengthened in 1822, and recently restored: it includes 800 books and MSS.

presented by the founder, whose episcopal vestments and shoes are also preserved here, and has two fine marble busts of Bacon and Locke. North of the great quadrangle, but separated from it by a wide and splendid lawn, about 300 feet square, are the new buildings; these, erected in 1733, from a design by Edward Holdsworth M.A. a fellow of the college, are of three storys, in the Italian style, and have a piazza in the lower story, on the south front; to the west and north of these buildings stretches the grove or deer park, well timbered with fine old elms, and containing a numerous herd of brown and spotted deer; on the eastern side is the great meadow with the famous "water walks," forming a charmingly secluded and picturesquely wooded alcove, rather more than half a mile in length, surrounding the mead, and encompassed on its outer side by the divided streams of the Cherwell: the northern alley, known as Addison's walk, is named after Joseph Addison, the poet, who was a demy of Magdalen, and is said to have made this his favourite resort; south of the great quadrangle is the Chaplain's court, some of whose gabled buildings overhang the river: on the southern side of this court rises the magnificent tower, begun in 1492 and completed in 1505; it is 145 feet in height and consists of four stories with octagonal turrets at the angles: the fourth, or belfry story, has on each side two fine Perpendicular windows, and the whole is crowned by a rich open battlement, with eight crocketed pinnacles, alternately terminating in crosses and gilded vanes: the tower contains an exceptionally fine and widely celebrated peal of bells, dated respectively 1740, 1739, 1712 (2), 1748, 1623 (6th and 10th), 1828 and 1641, while the 7th bell has only a mediæval inscription; the whole peal was refitted in 1875: as by far the most striking feature of the college, it is remarkable for its beautiful proportions, admirable simplicity and picturesque effect: and is the first grand object that meets the eye on entering the city from the London road: on the first of May in every year at 5 a.m. the college choir, in pursuance of an ancient custom, ascend the tower, and on its summit chant the Latin hymn Te Deum Patrem colimus; the celebration usually brings together a crowd of listeners in the street below, and at its close the bells break forth, and there is a great blowing of tin horns. A special festivity is also observed on Christmas Eve, in the college hall, when the carol In Dulci jubilo is sung, and the Gloria of Pergolesi. The new quadrangle, the erection of which was begun in 1881, on a site between the old buildings and the college school, is now (1883) nearly completed; the buildings, as far as at present carried out, consist of two blocks, one of which, facing the High street, is nearly 200 feet in length, with a tower 80 feet in height at the eastern end, forming the main entrance; at either end, on each story are also boldly designed oriel windows, and the sky line is picturesquely broken by gables, and clustered stacks of chimneys; the western block extends northwards at right angles to the other for about 114 feet, and the whole contains about 30 sets of rooms, besides two lecture rooms, the larger of which is 26 by 16½ feet; the wall at present bounding the college precincts on the west will eventually be removed and the new buildings, incorporating those of old Magdalen Hall, extended to St. John's quadrangle; the work has been carried out under the direction of Messrs. Bodley and Garner, architects, of London, and the estimated cost is £36,000: the stone used is chiefly from the Taynton and Deddington quarries, with Ancaster stone for the carved work. The foundation of this college originally consisted of a President, forty Fellows, four Chaplains, thirty Demies, eight Clerks and sixteen Choristers, with a succession of the demies to fellowships corresponding to the counties from which they had been nominated to their demyships, the ten fellowships not so appropriated being open. Like other colleges, however, Magdalen has undergone a change in its constitution under the operation of the commissioners and its foundation now consists of a President, not less than thirty, nor more than forty Fellows, with certain official fellowships, not to exceed eleven, four Chaplains, thirty-eight Demies, an Organist, ten Clerks, sixteen Choristers, a schoolmaster and usher. In the election to some of the demyships, attainments in mathematics and natural science are especially recognised. Certain prælectorships mentioned in the original statutes are also to be replaced by four "Waynflete professorships." By the statutes of 1882 fellowships are divided into Professional, Official and Prize fellowships, the two former classes are held by professors, and officers or tutors respectively; the latter are given to candidates of the greatest proficiency, and are tenable for seven years: the demyships are of the value of £30 yearly, and and are tenable for 21 years. The election to vacant fellowships and demyships takes place each year in the month of October. The college also maintains a moderately equipped laboratory with microscopical rooms, chiefly for the study of physiology, in the Botanic gardens opposite. The college presents to forty-one benefices, and its estimated annual income is £24,084 18s. 5d.

BRASENOSE COLLEGE.

Visitor, The Bishop of Lincoln.

The King's Hall and College of Brasenose was founded in 1509 by William Smyth, Bishop of Lincoln, and Sir Richard Sutton, of Prestbury, in Cheshire; and derives its name from the circumstances of its standing on the ground formerly occupied by Brasenose Hall, which is conceived to have had a knocker fixed in a nose of brass, a tradition perpetuated in the great gilt nose over the entrance gate: the college is situated on the western side of the Radcliffe square, and consists of two quadrangles, the first of which is entered by a very fine tower gate-way in the Perpendicular style, erected in 1512, and restored by the late Charles Buckler esq. in 1865, when the canopied niches were filled with statues of the Virgin and Child, St. Chad of Lichfield, and St. Hugh of Lincoln. This quadrangle, save for the third story added in the time of James I. retains its original character. The well-known piece of statuary, which formerly stood in the centre of the grass plot, representing Cain and Abel, or Samson slaying a Philistine, set up in 1679, was removed in 1881. On the south side is the Hall, entered by a curious shallow porch, over which are two ancient busts of King Alfred and John Scotus Erigena, (Duns Scotus), 1265-1308. The former is said to have been discovered when the foundation of the college was made The hall has a fine bay window at the upper end, filled with painted glass, and a massive chimney-piece, presented in 1760 by the Hon. Ashton Curzon D.C.L.; the walls are hung with portraits of the founders, King Alfred, Sarah Duchess of Somerset, Lord Chancellor Ellesmere, Dr. Gilbert, bishop of Chichester, the Marquess of Buckingham, Dr. Burton (author of the "Anatomy of Melancholy"), Dean Nowell of St. Paul's, formerly principal, and several other former principals of the college. In the second quadrangle, situated to the south of the first, are the library and chapel: the library, built in 1663 by Sir Christopher Wren, and refitted in 1780, contains busts of the Right Hon. Lord Grenville, Chancellor of the University from 1809 to 1833, by Nollekens, and of Dr. Kaye, Bishop of Lincoln, by Chantrey. The chapel, built in 1656-66, and also designed by Wren, has a roof of elaborate fan tracery, springing from coved arches, supported on brackets; the east window was filled with stained glass in 1855, representing various scenes in the life of Christ; the west window, the gift of Principal Cawley, is a representation of Christ and the Four Evangelists, executed by Pearson in 1776, from a painting by Mortimer, and the remaining windows are chiefly memorials to the Rev. F. W. Robertson M.A. 1853; Richard Harington, 1853; I. Barlow, 1859, and P. Haines, who fell at Lucknow, 1859: in the ante-chapel are monuments to Dr. Shippen: Bishop Cleaver, by Bacon; Dr. Hodson, by Manning; the Very Rev. H. Cholmondeley, Dean of Chester, by Sir Francis Chantrey, and to the Rev. James Smith, vice-principal, 1838: both the chapel and hall are architecturally interesting as exhibiting the result of an attempt to combine the Classic and Gothic styles. A block of new buildings now (1883) nearly completed, from designs by T. G. Jackson esq. M.A. has taken the place of two slightly-built and not well planned constructions, now standing in the kitchen or cloister quadrangle. By their removal, and that of some cottages and outbuildings, a spacious quadrangle, bounded on the east by the ante-chapel and cloisters, and on the west by the new wing, which is set a good way back, will be formed in the place of the present confined and irregular space. To the south, the new quadrangle is only separated from High street by the houses and shops facing that street and the buildings now being erected form part of a scheme for a quadrangle which will extend the whole distance from the old Brasenose buildings to High street, and add one more to the series of collegiate and academical buildings with which that street is lined. The buildings, which are 120 feet in length, and from 36 to 48 feet wide, consist of four stories, and contain 14 sets of rooms for undergraduates, two large lecture-rooms, and a spacious set of rooms for a Fellow. The eastern or principal front exhibits four gables, alternating with three semi-octagonal bays, with balustraded parapets, rising above the spring of the roof, and intended to carry the staircases, which are disposed in the usual collegiate manner; the west front is much plainer in design, but a similar style of treatment is preserved throughout; the basement contains cellars and domestic offices, all built with Dunnett's fire-proof vaulting: in order to gain space enough for the new building it was necessary to demolish the greater part of the well-known Amsterdam Court, which occupied the site, and preserved the name of Amsterdam or Broadgates Hall, one of the numerous academical halls with which Oxford abounded during the Middle Ages, and especially before the existence of colleges. The cottages which occupied its site contained a few traces of work at least as old as that time, and one of the fire-places has been refixed in the basement of the new building, where also are several fragments of twelfth and thirteenth century work, which were found built into the cottages as ordinary walling-stones. The walling of the new building is of Headington rubble, faced with Gibraltar rag-stone, with dressings of Clipsham-stone, and hard Doulting. The durable flag-stone of Castle hill, near Thurso, has been used for the landings, and the stairs are of hard Portland. The total cost is estimated at about £10,000. The foundation consists of a Principal, twelve Fellows and not less than eight open Scholars. There are also twenty-two "Somerset" Scholarships, limited in the first instance to persons educated at the grammar schools of Manchester and Marlborough and the cathedral school of Hereford: and twenty valuable exhibitions on the foundation of William Hulme esq. of Kearsley, in Lancashire, first founded in 1691 and finally remodelled by the Charity Commissioners in 1881. These are tenable for four years, the senior exhibitions being worth £130 and the junior £80 a year. Three clerical exhibitions were founded by the Misses Colquitt, of Green Bank, in Lancashire, in 1842, and an open scholarship in 1875 by Mrs. Jane Robinson in memory of the Rev. John Watson. The college presents to twenty-two benefices and Mr. Hulme's trustees have, in addition, the patronage of twenty-eight, to which they are bound to present those who either are or have been exhibitioners on his foundation. The annual income of the College is estimated at £12,681 6s. 5d.

Corpus Christi College.

Visitor, The Bishop of Winchester.

Corpus Christi College, founded by a charter, dated March 1, 1516-7, by Richard Fox, Bishop of Winchester and Lord Privy Seal in the reign of Henry VIII. is situated between Merton College on the east and Christ Church on the west, and chiefly consists of one quadrangle, with an additional block of buildings on the south side of the chapel court, overlooking Merton fields and the Broad Walk; the principal front immediately faces the south side of Oriel College, and exhibits an embattled façade of three stories, with a central gateway tower of four stages; over the gateway is a good oriel window, flanked and surmounted by rich canopied niches, and a singular piece of sculpture representing angels bearing the Host, or Corpus Christi, in a monstrance, with the arms of the founder of the See of Winchester on either side. The quadrangle, 101 feet by 80 in dimension, has in the centre a curious cylindrical dial, designed by Charles Turnbull M.A. a fellow of the college, in 1605 and constituting a perpetual calendar; above the capitol of the column is a pedestal with shields of arms, supporting a dwarf pyramidal finial, surmounted by a pelican, the badge of the founder. On the eastern side of the quadrangle is the hall, 50 feet by 25 feet, which has a good late Perpendicular roof and north window, and contains various portraits, among which are those of the founder, an original painting on panel; Bishop Oldham, co-founder, Lord Tenterden and Thomas Burgess, Bishop of Salisbury, both fellows and tutors of the college; Henry Philpotts, late Bishop of Exeter and others. A statue of the founder stands in a niche on the south side of the quadrangle and on the same side is the library, containing a remarkably fine collection of curious printed books and manuscripts, a large selection of political tracts from the fifteenth to the nineteenth centuries, specimens of early Italian typography, collected by Bishop Sherwood and a valuable collection bequeathed in 1755 by Lord Coleraine. Eastward of the library and separated from it only by a corridor, is the chapel, erected in 1517, but considerably altered in 1676-7; it has a good Perpendicular east window, and an altar piece representing the Adoration, ascribed to Rubens and purchased for £2,500 by Sir Richard Worsley bart. from the collection of the Prince of Condé; in a recess in the chapel is preserved the pastoral staff of the founder, of silver gilt, richly ornamented, and now nearly 500 years old; the eagle lectern was given by John Claymund, first president of the college, ob. 1537, whose brass, with an emaciated effigy in a shroud and 12 verses, remains nearly perfect on the south side of the chapel; there is also some ancient plate, including an exquisitely beautiful Pyx, crucifixes and spoons, formerly belonging to the founder. Records of marriages celebrated in this chapel from 1693 to 1734, of persons from the parish of Warborough, Oxon, are contained in the registers of that parish. At the east end is a gallery, constructed between the chapel and library, containing, among others, portraits of the seven bishops committed to the tower by James II.; there are several memorial windows and various monuments; south of the chapel is a small court, surrounded on the south and east sides by cloisters, the resting place of many learned men and containing a number of mural monuments; at the east side is the common room, with a bust by Chantry of Dr. Walker King, Bishop of Rochester, 1809-27; on the east side is the Fellows' building, erected in 1706, on the site of the old cloisters, by Thomas Turner, president 1687-1714, at a cost of £6,000, from a design, it is said, by Dean Aldrich; the front, 119 feet in extent, is of the Ionic order and much admired for the chaste style of its architecture: extending from its south front is the fellows' garden, which forms a broad terrace, constructed in part on the rampart of the old city wall, traces of which may be seen in the wall bounding the garden on the south side. When the allied sovereigns visited this university in 1814, the King of Prussia resided in the lodgings of the President. The original foundation of this college was for a President, twenty Fellows, two Chaplains and twenty Scholars, the Scholars succeeding to the fellowships of corresponding counties, as did the Demies to the fellowships of Magdalen: the county limitation was, however, abolished by the commissioners of 1855, and the succession to fellowships cut off by throwing them open to candidates from the whole university; under the statutes confirmed by the Queen in council in 1882 the College will consist of a President, five professorial fellows, five or six official fellows, three extraordinary and fourteen ordinary fellows and thirty-six scholars; the professorial fellows will be the Corpus professors of Latin, Jurisprudence, Comparative Philology and the Romance Languages and Whyte's Professor of Moral Philosophy. The college presents to 22 benefices, and its annual income is estimated at £14,861.

Christ Church.

Visitor, The Queen.

Christ Church, the largest college in the University, was originally founded by Cardinal Wolsey, Archbishop of York, on the site of the suppressed priory of St. Frideswide, under letters patent of Henry VIII. dated July 13th, 1525; and the first stone was laid on the 17th July, with great pomp and ceremony, by Dr. John Longland, Bishop of Lincoln, but after considerable progress was made in the building, the cardinal, having fallen into disgrace with his royal master, was attainted in October, 1532 and the foundation, not being complete in law, fell into the King's hands, with all it revenues, actual and prospective, some of which he distributed among his courtiers. In 1532, by letters patent dated July 8th, Henry VIII. refounded the College, dedicating it to the Holy Trinity, the Virgin Mary and St. Frideswide and endowed it with an annual revenue of £2,000; but in 1543, having previously constituted the See of Oxford, the King ordered the surrender of the college with all its possessions, which was accordingly made by a deed dated May 20 in that year; and on Nov. 4, 1546, by fresh letters patent, it was re-established and connected with the newly created See, as a mixed foundation, partly capitular and partly collegiate, under the name of "Christ Church;" the priory church of St. Frideswide being at the same time constituted a cathedral. The foundation consisted, for about three centuries, of a dean, eight canons, one hundred students, eight chaplains, an organist, eight lay-clerks and eight choristers. One studentship was added in 1664 by the benefaction of William Thurston esq. Sixty of the students were elected from the scholars of Westminster school, the remaining 41 being nominated by the dean and canons in turn. Under the statutes made by the University Commisioners of 1877 and confirmed by the Queen in council in 1882, the foundation is hereafter to consist of a Dean and six Canons, fourteen non-official students (holding for seven years), not more than fifteen official students; a number of scholars (five being elected annually by open competition, and three from Westminster), six chaplains, an organist, nine lay clerks and eight choristers; and of this body, the senior students, of whom there are now 29, correspond in some degree to fellows in other colleges; there are also 36 junior students 12 scholars and 34 exhibitioners. The buildings of this society are so extensive and magnificent as to require a more than usually detailed description. The principal front of the college, on the west side of St. Aldate's street, is about 400 feet in extent, and has a projecting wing at either end, adorned with an oriel window reaching to the parapet, and flanked on each side by an octagonal tower; in the centre is the famous "Tom Gateway," at one time known as the "Fayre Gate"; which, including the richly panelled towers at the sides, was carried up by Wolsey to the level of the parapet, and completed by Sir Christopher Wren in 1682; the roof of the gateway is vaulted and adorned with the shields of various benefactors and over the entrance is a large window with crocketed ogee head; above all rises the well known octagonal tower in which hangs "Great Tom of Oxford," formerly the clock bell at Oseney Abbey and one of the largest bells in England; it has been five times re-cast, the existing bell being the work of Christopher Barker of London, in 1680; and is 5ft. 9in. in height, 21 feet in circumference and 7ft. 1in. in diameter and weighs 7 tons 12 cwts. Around the bell is the inscription: MAGNVS . THOMAS . CLVSIVS . OXONIENSIS . RENATVS . APR. 8. 1680. Every night, at five minutes past nine, it tolls 101 times (indicating the former number of students on the foundation of Christ Church), and this curfew is taken as the signal for closing the various college gates. The great quadrangle, entered through this gateway, is 264 by 261 feet square, with a wide terrace walk round it, and has in the centre a circular pool, still called "Mercury," from a leaden statue which formerly stood there. The water which supplies the fountain jet is obtained from a spring at Hinksey, in Berks, about a mile distant. On the south side is the hall with the new bell tower, on the east side the deanery, at the north-east corner Dean Fell's tower, and the remaining portions consist chiefly of the houses of several of the canons: in 1876-8 the whole quadrangle was very effectively restored under the direction of Messrs. Bodley and Garner, architects, of London, when the walls were refaced, and the balustrading erected by Wren replaced by embattled parapets bearing in panels the shields of Henry VIII., Cardinal Wolsey and various benefactors: in the course of the work, the lower portions of many of the piers erected for the cloister designed by Wolsey were uncovered; these, as well as the shafts and springing of the arches on the exterior walls have been renewed and the cloister may at some future time be completed; the new campanile or bell-tower, situated at the south-east corner, is a massive oblong structure in the Perpendicular style, with open embattled turrets at the angles and contains a fine and musical peal of ten bells, the "Bonny Christ Church Bells" of Dean Aldrich; of these, the fifth and tenth are said to have come from Oseney Abbey; the first four date from 1698 to 1747; the tenth is dated 1589 and the rest date from 1611 to 1640, three having inscriptions in old English characters; they were removed from the cathedral tower, considered to be unsafe, in 1871 and were re-hung in the new belfry in 1872; a wide archway in this tower opens into the spacious vaulted staircase lobby leading to the hall, the exquisite fan-tracing of which, supported by a single clustered pillar, is a remarkable example of late Perpendicular, and was erected in 1640 by Dean Fell. The hall is a magnificent apartment 115 feet in length by 40 wide, and 50 feet in height and is a portion of the buildings completed by Wolsey; the lofty and highly-enriched timber roof of Irish oak, profusely decorated with the armorial bearings of Henry VIII. and Wolsey, is dated 1529 and was repaired in 1720; at the upper end, on the right of the dais, is a fine oriel window, filled with heraldic glass in 1867, at the cost of the late Archdeacon Clerke, in honour of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales and the Crown Prince of Denmark, both students of this house. A fine collection of portraits, 71 in number, forms an appropriate decoration to the hall, and includes Henry VIII. by Holbein; Cardinal Wolsey, by Holbein; Queen Elizabeth, by Zucchero; Dean Aldrich, by Kneller; Lord Grenville, Chancellor of the University, by Owen; The Right Hon. George Canning, by Lawrence, and numerous celebrated divines; at the upper end of the hall is a bust of George IV. by Chantry. In the restoration of 1876-8 the battlements of the hall were renewed and crocketed pinnacles added: at the foot of the great staircase, leading to the hall, is the entrance to the kitchen, said to be the first part of the college completed, and still retaining its original appearance as erected by Wolsey in 1528; it contains a large gridiron, 4ft. 6in. by 4ft. 1in. and supported on four wheels. The common room, under the hall, contains portraits of Henry VIII. Archbishop Markham, Dean Aldrich and Doctors Busby, Friend, Nicholl, and Frewin. At the north-east corner of the great quadrangle, is Dean Fell's tower, heightened and restored during the recent restorations and furnished with a battlemented parapet and angle turret; a wide archway beneath this tower leads to Peckwater Quadrangle, which derives its name from an ancient inn or hostel, which stood at the south-west corner of the present court, and was, in the thirteenth century, the property of one Ralph Peckwater; the whole quadrangle, as now existing, was rebuilt from designs by Dean Aldrich in 1705, excepting the southern side, containing the library, a stately building of two stories, divided into seven compartments by tall and massive pillars of the Corinthian order, supporting an entablature and balustrading; it was begun in 1716 and completed in 1761, from designs by Dr. G. Clarke, fellow of All Souls' and M.P. for the university, and underwent some repairs in 1829; in the lobby are busts of the four Georges by Rysbrack, Bacon and Chantrey, and a fine sitting statue, by Chantrey, of Dean Jackson, removed here from the cathedral; the lower portion of the building, forming a picture gallery, contains the pictures and busts presented to the college in 1765 by Brigadier-General Guise, and some curious paintings of the Italian schools of the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, presented by the Hon. W. T. H. Fox Strangways in 1828, furnishing original examples of Margaritone, Cimabue, Mantegna, Andrea del Sarto, Titian, and A. Carracci, with several specimens by the hands of early masters previous to the introduction of painting in oils; on the staircase is a statue of Locke, by Roubiliac; the library proper, 142 by 30 feet, contains a select and valuable collection of books, manuscripts and coins, and includes a prayer-book formerly belonging to Wolsey, the original score of the Magdalen May Day hymn, and a complete set of the singular zodiacal coins of Hindostan; eastward of Peckwater quadrangle is the small Canterbury quadrangle which occupies the site of Canterbury College, founded by Simon Islip, Archbishop of Canterbury in 1363: the old buildings, which had been re-fitted for the use of students by Dean Brian Duppa, were removed in 1773, and the north and east sides rebuilt, chiefly at the expense of Dr. Robinson, primate of Ireland, who contributed upwards of £4,000; the fine gateway on the east side, which is the principal entrance to the college from the east, adjoins Corpus Christi college, and was rebuilt in 1778, from a design by Mr. J. Wyatt; it consists of a single arch flanked on each side by two columns of the Doric order, supporting a frieze and parapet, the frontage on either side is relieved by blank recesses; a large space of ground to the north of this gate, formerly shut in by a high wall, has recently been for the most part thrown into the street, and the remainder, enclosed by ornamental stone piers, and an iron railing, is planted with trees. The new buildings, situated on the south side of the college precincts, are in the Venetian Gothic style and were commenced in 1862, and completed in 1866, at a cost of £20,000, from designs by Sir Thomas Deane, and occupy an entire length of 350 feet, comprising the site of Chaplains' quadrangle south of the cathedral, Dean Fell's buildings and a part of the adjoining garden; they are of three storeys, with dormers in the roof and provide 50 additional sets of rooms and a dwelling for the porter; the central tower, 90 feet high, is situated 70 feet eastward of the former entrance from the meadow, and is four storeys in height, with a bold parapet, above which rises a gable, ornamented with corbie steps; the tower portion forms a porch, with deeply recessed archways; westward of the chaplains' quadrangle, and separated from it by the approaches to the kitchens, is a large court, with a chemical laboratory; bounded southwards by the road leading into the college precincts from St. Aldate's, on the opposite side of which are the new buildings of the Cathedral School.

Christ Church Meadow, belonging to this college, and lying to the south-east of it, is bounded on the east by the river Cherwell, on the south by the Isis, on the west by a branch of the same river, and on the north by the Broad Walk; it is completely surrounded by wide gravelled walks a mile and a quarter in extent, adorned with ornamental trees, and on the west side, commencing immediately opposite the new meadow gate, is the new avenue, 600 yards in length, formed in 1868, and leading immediately from the college to the river.

The dean and chapter present to ninety three benefices, giving the preference to students and then to chaplains of the house in order of seniority. The estimated annual income, including the Cathedral establishment, is £49,056 6s. 4d.

Trinity College.

Visitor, The Bishop of Winchester.

Trinity College, occupying a retired site on the north side of Broad street, was originally founded towards the close of the thirteenth century, by the heads of the Benedictine priory at Durham, as a nursery for that society and was hence called Durham College; to this foundation Richard Angervyle or de Bury, Bishop of Durham, 1333-45, left his great collection of books, and Edward III. and Richard II. were also its benefactors, but on the dissolution of the monasteries it was suppressed, and the site and buildings were purchased 20th Feb. 1555, by Sir Thomas Pope kt. a native of Deddington, Oxon, who repaired the buildings and refounded the college, dedicating it to the "Holy and Undivided Trinity." The buildings consist of two quadrangles, the first of which has the chapel on the south side, and on the east and west sides the remains of the ancient buildings of Durham College, part of which constitute the hall and library. The only portion of the buildings seen from Broad street is the south side of the chapel, approached through a spacious turfed court, enclosed on the street front by iron railings, with elaborately wrought gates, bearing the arms and crest of the founder. The chapel, designed by Sir Christopher Wren, is a structure of considerable elegance, in the Italian style and is lighted by round-headed windows, divided by pilasters of the Corinthian order, supporting an entablature and balustrading; at the west end is a gateway tower of three stages of the Ionic order, similarly finished and crowned with statues at the angles symbolical of Divinity, Astronomy, Geometry and Physic; the chapel was erected at the sole cost of Dr. Ralph Bathurst, then president, who laid the first stone, July 9th, 1691, and the building was consecrated by Dr. Hough, Bishop of Oxford, April 12th, 1694; the interior is chiefly remarkable for its unrivalled screen and altar piece, exquisitely carved in cedar and lime wood, by the famous Grinling Gibbons; the painted ceiling, representing the "Ascension," is by Peter Berchet: on the north side of the communion table is the fine altar-tomb of the founder, with full-sized recumbent alabaster effigies of himself, in armour, and Elizabeth (Powlet) his third wife; the panelled sides enclose shields of arms within wreaths, and on the upper slab is a marginal inscription; there are several stained windows, including one lately erected to the Rev. Isaac Williams, 1865; the communion plate includes a silver-gilt chalice, originally belonging to St. Alban's Abbey, and presented to the college by the founder; in the ante-chapel are interred several former Presidents and Fellows, and Thomas Warton, poet laureate, ob. 1790. The library, on the east side of the quadrangle, was also that of Durham College, and is the most ancient portion of the college buildings; the windows contain fragments of stained glass from the old chapel of the fourteenth century, and the book cases were erected about 1680; the collections include a large number of valuable topographical works, and a MS. of Euclid, supposed to be 600 years old. On the west side is the hall, built in 1618-20, on the site of the old refectory; the interior was ceiled, re-wainscoted and decorated in 1772, but the roof was again reconstructed at the beginning of the present century and a marble chimney-piece added in 1846. Among the portraits are those of Queen Mary and Philip of Spain, one of the founder and his third wife, Elizabeth; William Pope, first Earl of Downe, Archbishop Sheldon, William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, Lord North, Thomas Warton, several former presidents and other persons of distinction; over the north end is a small bell-turret with a cupola and vane. The second quadrangle, north of the first, has north, east and south sides only, enclosing a large gravelled court, open on the west side to the gardens; the north wing was finished in 1667, the western portion in 1682, and the south wing in 1728; each portion is three stories in height, and the style is uniformly plain. The gardens, covering about four acres, consist almost wholly of magnificent and unbroken lawns, bordered with flower beds and choicely planted shrubberies; on the south side is the famous "Lime Tree Walk," an avenue of 48 trees, 24 on each side, the lower boughs of which, skilfully interwoven, form a unique roof of continuous foliage; the gardens are bounded on the east by the Parks road and open into it by handsome gates of wrought iron, between two noble piers in the Italian style, surmounted by large classic urns. The foundation of the college consists of a President, twelve Fellows and twelve Scholars, and there are besides various other scholarships and exhibitions, some for the encouragement of Mathematics and National Science, and others for deserving persons in need of assistance at the University; there are now (1883) nineteen scholars; the election both to Fellowships and Scholarships is entirely open. The college presents to ten benefices.

St. John's College.

Visitor, The Bishop of Winchester.

St. John's College, founded May 5th, 1557, by Sir Thomas White kt. is situated on the west side of St. Giles' street and occupies the site of the Cistercian College of St. Bernard, founded by Archbishop Chichele in 1436-7, but dissolved, as a monastic institution, by Henry VIII. and subsequently purchased by the new founder. The college buildings consist chiefly of two quadrangles, with additions north of these and extensive gardens in the rear; the principal front, facing St. Giles's, may now be said to consist of two, if not three, distinct blocks, of which the older portion, towards the south, belongs in part to Chichele's foundation; and over the entrance of the embattled tower gateway, the statue of St. Bernard still remains; the intermediate portion is chiefly remarkable for its curious Jacobean battlements, and till recently marked the boundary of the college buildings in that direction; but in 1880-1 a new range of buildings, with a central embattled gateway tower, was erected northward of these, from designs by the late Sir G. G. Scott R.A. Opposite the ancient front, but separated from it by the pavement, is an enclosed terraced walk, 208 feet long by 44 wide, formed in 1576 and shaded by rows of trees; the first quadrangle, entered by St. Bernard's gateway, is of two stories, and has on the north side the hall and chapel; this side, with the south and west sides, are portions of St. Bernard's College, but the eastern side was added in 1597. The hall, formerly the refectory, has a particularly fine arched roof and a screen of Portland stone, and contains a full length portrait of the founder, presented by Thomas Rowney esq. in 1692, a full length portrait of George III. in his coronation robes, by Ramsay, and portraits of Archbishops Laud and Juxon, Hudson, the Arctic navigator, and a number of others; the chapel, which forms a continuation of the hall eastward, was consecrated in 1530 or later, and repaired by Sir Thomas White; between 1663 and 1678 extensive alterations, chiefly of a debased character, were made, but in 1843 the structure was restored by Mr. Blore, and a ceiling of fan-tracery constructed; and in 1872-3 the interior was re-decorated and three memorial windows inserted to the Very Rev. H. S. Mansel D.D. Dean of St. Paul's, formerly tutor; the Rev. Philip Wynter D.D. 34 years president; and the Rev. Robert Dean M.A. formerly tutor, all of whom died in 1872; at the north-east angle is a small but beautiful mortuary chapel, built in 1662, by Dr. Richard Baylie, president, to receive the body of his son; in the north wall is a marble urn, containing the heart of Dr. Richard Rawlinson, the antiquary, 1755; and there are monuments to the founder, 1566; Archbishop Laud, 1645; Archbishop Juxon, 1663; all of whom are buried here, with other distinguished persons. The ante-chapel also contains brasses to Robert Harte, 1571; Robert Shingleton M.A. Fellow, 1577; John Glover M.A. Fellow, 1578; and Henry Price B.D. Fellow, 1600. A vaulted passage, with a stone roof of elegant fan-tracery, leads to the second or eastern quadrangle, built in 1631-5, chiefly at the expense of Archbishop Laud; on the eastern and western sides are open colonnades, formed of sixteen pillars of the Doric order, each consisting of a solid block of Bletchingdon marble; in the centre, on either side, is a portico profusely ornamented, and above these, in niches, are bronze statues of Charles I. and his Queen, Henrietta, by Fanelli of Florence; the south and east sides are occupied by the library, of which the southern portion was built in 1596, and the eastern wing, so greatly admired for the grace and picturesqueness of its garden front, in 1631, from designs by Inigo Jones; in this part of the library are preserved the so-called pastoral staff of Archbishop Laud, his mitre, cap and walking stick, together with a fine bust in bronze, some ancient vestments, altar tapestry, banners and several illuminated missals; the gardens, extending eastward to the Parks road, occupy an area of about three acres, with wide lawns, well planted shrubberies and some finely grown cedar and chestnut trees. The college originally consisted of a President, fifty Fellows and one Chaplain, an Organist, eight Choristers, six singing men and two sextons. All the Fellows, exceeping six of the founder's kin, two from Coventry, two from Bristol, two from Reading, and one from Tonbridge school, were elected from Merchant Taylors' School in London. In 1854 four additional Fellowships were founded under the will of Dudley Fereday esq. of Ettingshall Park, Staffordshire, and four scholarships, by the benefaction of the late Rev. J. T. Casberd D.C.L. formerly Fellow of the college and Prebendary of Fairwell in Llandaff Cathedral. In future the foundation will consist of a president, not less than 14 nor more than 18 Fellows; two ex-officio Fellowships, to be subsequently held by the Professors of Arabic and Mechanics; not less than 28 appropriated Scholarships, of which 15 will be assigned to Merchant Taylors' School, two apiece to Coventry, Bristol and Reading schools, and one to Tonbridge school; there will also be four Senior Scholarships for persons educated at Merchant Taylors' School, and six open scholarships, besides one created from the bequest of W. Lambe. The college presents to thirty-four benefices and has an estimated annual income of £22,030 3s.

Jesus College.

Visitor, The Earl of Pembroke.

Jesus College, founded by a charter of Queen Elizabeth, dated 27 June, 1571, on the petition of Hugh Price D.C.L. treasurer of St. David's, is situated opposite to Exeter College, on the west side of Turl street, and consists of two quadrangles, of which the first contains the chapel on the northern side and the hall on the western. The principal front, wholly rebuilt in 1856 from the designs of Messrs. J. C. & C. A. Buckler, of Oxford, in the Collegiate style of the sixteenth century, is of limited extent, but has a good embattled gateway tower, with a square turret rising above it on the north side, and over the entrance an elegant oriel window; at the northern extremity of the façade appears the eastern gable of the chapel, and beyond it the gateway of the Principal's garden; the south front, facing Market street, was restored in 1853; the first quadrangle, 90 feet by 70 feet, is of three stories, with an embattled parapet; the chapel, situated on the north side, was consecrated May 28, 1621, and lengthened by the addition of a chancel in 1836; over the entrance is the motto "Ascendat oratio, descendat gratia;" the former altar-piece, 10 feet by 7 feet, representing "St. Michael overcoming Satan," from a painting by Guido, is now placed against the west wall; the east window is a very fair example of late Gothic; it dates from 1636 and in 1856 was filled with stained glass, representing the "types and antitypes of Christ," and the resurrections of Jairus' daughter, the son of the widow of Nain, and Lazarus: there are monuments to Sir Eubule Thelwall, principal and benefactor, 1621-30; Sir Leoline Jenkins, principal, 1661-73; Col. Sir Edward Stradling, 1644; and several other heads of this society: the whole structure was carefully restored in 1864. The Hall, on the western side, partly separates the two quadrangles, and is a spacious and lofty chamber, completed by Sir Eubule Thelwall; it has an elaborately carved screen, and at the upper end, projecting into the second quadrangle, is a fine embattled semi-octagonal oriel of 20 lights; the walls are hung with portraits of Queen Elizabeth, Charles I. by Vandyck, Charles II. Sir Eubule Thelwall, Sir Leoline Jenkins, Bishops Andrews, Wynne, Westphaling, Thomas and others. The Library, erected in 1677, at the cost of Sir Leoline Jenkins, and situated at the south-west angle, includes, among its treasures, the "Llyfr Coch" or "Red book of Hengist," 1318-1454, a collection of romances and poems in Welsh; and the MSS. of Lord Herbert of Cherbury, 1581-1648. In the Bursary are preserved a silver-gilt bowl, weighing over 278ozs. presented in 1732 by Sir W. W. Wynne; a stirrup of Queen Elizabeth; a watch, formerly belonging to Charles I. and an early portrait of the Queen. The inner quadrangle, 100 feet by 90 feet, was completed in 1677; it is also of three stories and has the singular ogee battlements which distinguish Oriel and University colleges; the clock, with dials facing both quadrangles, was given by Dr. Foulkes, principal 1817-57. The college now consists of a principal, not less than ten nor more than fourteen fellows, and twenty-nine scholars. One scholarship was founded by King Charles I. for the benefit of natives of Jersey or Guernsey or one of the islands adjacent to them. One moiety of the foundation Fellows and Scholarships is open without restriction, the other moiety, together with the four scholarships and exhibitions of the foundation of Edward Meyrieke, is limited, in the first instance, to either (1), natives of Wales and Monmouthshire; (2) to sons of persons who have resided for seven years in the same region; or (3) persons who have been educated for three years in a school or schools therein; or (4) persons acquainted with and able to speak the Welsh language. The college presents to twenty two benefices and has an annual income of £13,567 10s. 11d.

Wadham College.

Visitor, The Bishop of Bath and Wells.

Wadham College, situated on the eastern side of Park street, and in part bounded by the new Parks, was founded in 1610, by Nicholas and Dorothy Wadham, the latter, after her husband's death in October 1609, carrying out the design which he did not live to complete; the first stone was laid 31 July, 1610, and the college opened 20 April, 1613. The buildings, occupying the site of an ancient monastery of Augustine friars, consist chiefly of a single quadrangle, and exhibit fewer structural changes than any similar fabric in the University: the western or principal front is of three stories, with a battlemented parapet, and a gable at either extremity, relieved by a lofty oriel, continued to the third storey; in the centre is an embattled gateway tower of four stages, with a wide bay window of six lights over the entrance, and a large square turret at the north-east angle. The quadrangle is about 130 feet square, with the chapel, hall and library on the eastern side; the first of these consist of a noble ante chapel, which is the portion seen in the quadrangle, and a spacious choir, forming a considerable wing, projecting eastward; the architecture of the choir, however, differs entirely from the rest of the buildings, but the windows have good, though late, Perpendicular tracery; the east window is filled with glass by Bernard Van Linge, inserted in 1621, at a cost of £114, by Sir John Strangeways; and the five windows on either side are also stained; the floor was paved with marble in 1677-8, and the brass lectern was given in 1691 by Sir Thomas Lear, of Lindridge, Devon; the choir was repaired and new roofed in 1832-3, by Mr. Blore; a finely wrought stone screen, erected at the east end, and the stalls restored; two lofty arches, an imitation of those at New college, divide the ante-chapel from the transept; but the former, though uniform with the hall, is dissimilar to the choir, and the tracery of the windows is altogether abnormal; in the ante-chapel are monuments to various wardens and fellows, and a fine tomb to Sir John Portman bart. ob. 1634; and there are four stained windows, with figures of patriarchs and saints, erected from designs by Mr. John Bridges, of Oxford, in 1838 and subsequently. The clock outside the chapel was designed by Sir Christopher Wren, who entered this college in 1647; continued southwards from the ante-chapel is the hall, entered by a flight of steps immediately facing the gateway; over the entrance are statues of James I. and the founders, with an inscription relating the foundation of the college, and the whole fabric was completed in April, 1613; the interior, 83 feet by 35 feet, and 37 feet in height, is one of the finest in Oxford; the open-timbered roof being a rich though curious example of the adaptation of Gothic form to Jacobean details; at the south end is a large window with singular tracery of the same date; among the portraits adorning the walls are those of the founders, James I. George I. William III. Admiral Blake, Chief Justice Pratt, Sir Christopher Wren, John, Lord Lovelace, Thomas, Lord Windham, a series of bishops and other persons of eminence; in the common room, between the chapel and hall, is a portrait of Alice George, of Oxford, who died, aged 120, in 1691; the library, 53 feet by 30 feet, forms a wing over the kitchen, corresponding with the choir of the chapel, with which it is connected by a cloister and contains a valuable collection of works by early Italian authors, Warner's Shakspere collections, and a rare Saxon MS. of the tenth century. North of the college are the gardens, well-arranged and planted and containing some fine cedars and other trees. The foundation at present consists of a warden, twelve fellows, two chaplains, eighteen scholars and several exhibitioners. The college presents to twelve benefices and its estimated annual income is £10,716 8s.

PEMBROKE COLLEGE.

Visitor, The Chancellor of the University.

Pembroke College, situated on the west side of St. Aldate's street, adjoining the church of that name and opposite Christ Church, was founded by Thomas Tesdale esq. of Glympton, Oxon, and Richard Wightwick B.D. rector of East Ilsley, Berks, under letters patent granted by James I. 29 June, 1624, in response to a petition to the Crown, from the mayor, bailiffs and burgesses of Abingdon. Mr. Tesdale, who had been the first scholar placed in Abingdon School by its founder, John Roysse, in 1563, anxious to provide the boys of that school with the means of University education, had by his will left £5,000 to endow fellowships and scholarships for boys from Abingdon School in any college in the University of Oxford; after his death, which occurred June 13, 1610, his trustees made the offer to Balliol, but that society having just accepted a somewhat similar trust in connection with Tiverton School, under the will of its founder, Peter Blundell esq. declined it; they, however, "with the promise of the charity of Mr. Richard Wightwick, who also had intentions to found fellowships and scholarships in some colleges in Oxford, determined to found a new college" in the old Society of Broadgates Hall, which had in former years belonged in part to the Abbey of Abingdon; and they accordingly procured authority from James I. to re-constitute Broadgates Hall as Pembroke College, so naming it after the Earl of Pembroke, at that time Chancellor of the University, who gave his sanction to the nomination of a master by the trustees instead of claiming his own right to nominate a Principal of the still existing Society of Broadgates Hall. The foundation so constituted consisted of a master, ten fellows and ten scholars, who were in future to be elected from Abingdon School, the scholars to succeed to fellowships as vacancies occurred, but with a preference to those of the kin of the founders, in case any presented themselves for election. By an ordinance of the University Commissioners, under the Statute 17 and 18 Vict. c. 81 the foundation is, in future, to consist of a master, not less than ten fellows and not less than twelve scholars; and there are now (1883) twenty-three scholars. Both fellowships and scholarships are entirely open except five, which are to be filled up from Abingdon School, and two by the election of persons born in Guernsey, Jersey, or the adjacent islands and educated for the two years last preceding the election in Elizabeth College or Victoria College. The succession of the Abingdon scholars to fellowships, together with the claims of founders' kin, has been abolished. The principal front, rebuilt in the Perpendicular style, in 1829-30, consists of two portions, each of three stories, with a battlemented parapet, at right angles to each other, and facing respectively north and east; in the angle, on the north front, is a gateway tower of four stages, with an oriel above the entrance and an embattled parapet, enriched with panelling; the eastern front includes the entrance to the master's lodgings; the remaining buildings form two quadrangles, of which the first, entered by the gateway, occupies the site of the ancient Broadgates Hall; immediately on the right of the entrance is the library, formerly the hall, and in part identical with the original refectory of the older foundation; it contains a bust of Dr. Johnson, who was a student here, and the library of Bishop Hall, bequeathed by him to the college; the second quadrangle, which extends to the west of the first, has on the north side a range of new buildings, about 150 feet in length, erected in 1845 and 1846, under the direction of the Rev. Francis Jeune D.C.L. then master of the college and afterwards Bishop of Peterborough; these contain a handsome common room and bursary, rooms for several fellows and for about twenty-four undergraduates; on the south side is the chapel, a small structure of unpretending character, with Ionic pilasters between the windows, and a panelled parapet; it was built partly at the cost of Bartholomew Tipping esq. of Oxford, and consecrated July 10, 1732, by Dr. Potter, bishop of Oxford; over the communion table is a copy, by Cranke, of Rubens' "Christ after His Resurrection;" on the west side is the hall, a fine building in the Perpendicular style, erected in 1848, from designs by Mr. Hayward; it is of five bays, with an embattled tower of three stages at the south-east angle, and an elegant louvre in the centre of the roof; at the upper end, on the south side, is a tall oriel, with three tiers of lights, rising almost to the parapet, and the walls are hung with a large number of portraits, including those of the founders, Charles I. Queen Anne, Simon, Earl Harcourt, Lord Ossulstone, several bishops, masters of the college and others. Queen Anne annexed a canonry in the Cathedral Church of Gloucester to the mastership for ever. The college presents to eight benefices and its estimated annual income is £6,214 12s. 6d.

WORCESTER COLLEGE.

Visitor, The Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain.

Worcester College is situated at the western end of Beaumont Street, and was founded in 1714 by the trustees of Sir Thomas Cookes bart. who by his will left, in 1701, £10,000 in trust of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of Worcester, Oxford, Lichfield and Gloucester, the Vice-Chancellor and heads of houses at Oxford, to erect collegiate buildings with suitable endowments, or to endow some existing college or hall with fellowships and scholarships. This sum accumulated till it reached £15,000, when the trustees purchased Gloucester Hall, an ancient Benedictine foundation established in 1283, by John Giffard, baron of Brimesfield, Gloucestershire and incorporated it into a college with the name of Worcester (Sir T. Cookes' county), under a charter of Queen Anne, dated 29th July, 1714; Richard Blechynden D.C.L. being then principal of Gloucester Hall, and becoming the first provost of the college. The Chancellor of the University retained his patronage of the hall by the reserved right to him to appoint the provost of the college from amongst the fellows, or those who had been fellows. The original foundation was for a Provost, six Fellows and six Scholars. Subsequent benefactions by the Rev. James Finney D.D. Prebendary of Durham, Mrs. Sarah Eaton and George Clarke D.C.L. fellow of All Souls College, added to the foundation, which, after various changes, was made to consist of a Provost, fifteen Fellows and sixteen Scholars, with some Exhibitioners and a Bible-clerk. Of the scholarships, the six of the original foundation are appropriated to Bromsgrove School, in Worcestershire; one, on the foundation of Dr. Finney, to natives of Staffordshire and five, on the foundation of Mrs. Sarah Eaton, to sons of clergymen of the Church of England in need of assistance for their University education. Dr. Clarke's three scholarships are without limitation, as also is one recently founded by Robert Barnes esq. of the annual value of £120, for the encouragement of Biblical studies. By the new statutes of 1882 the provost will in future be elected by the fellows, of whom there will eventually be nine or ten. The fellowships will be open without restriction and be tenable for seven years. Tutorial fellows may also be re-elected. There will eventually be nineteen scholarships, viz. five on Sir T. Cooke's foundation, for Bromsgrove School; four on Mr. Eaton's foundation, for sons of clergymen; five on Dr. Clarke's; one on Dr. Finney's; three college scholarships and one Barnes scholarship; all of which are open. The other scholarships have the limit of age fixed at nineteen. There will be also ten exhibitions. The buildings consist chiefly of one large quadrangle with some less uniform buildings surrounding a smaller quadrangle or court on the south-east. The south side of the principal quadrangle consists of the quaint and very interesting old buildings forming a portion of the existing buildings of Gloucester Hall; these were originally separate and distinct lodgings, erected by various Benedictine abbeys as residences for their respective students and for the most part retain all their original features; the north and east sides, built in the Italian style, on a raised terrace, contain the provost's lodgings, a large number of rooms both for the fellows and undergraduates, the common room and bursary and the library the chapel and hall projecting beyond the front of the college towards the east, on the north and south sides of the entrance respectively, the court thus formed being enclosed by railings and gates of ornamental iron work, erected in 1871. The chapel, entered from the piazza on the interior of the east side, is 60 feet in length, and was magnificently restored in 1864-70, by the late Mr. Burges, at a cost of £5,000, in the style of the Renaissance; the exquisitely painted interior embodies a scheme of iconography, representing Man in the Te Deum, and Nature in the Benedicite, combining in the worship of God. Placed in niches in the angles of the chapel are statues of the four Evangelists; the tall altar-candlesticks and the lectern are of alabaster, and on the latter are placed copies of the Old and New Testament, splendidly bound in massive silver, with scripture subjects in alto-relievo, and elegant arabesques in panel: these were presented by the Rev. C. H. O. Daniel, vice-provost, and are valued at £70; the flooring of the vestibule and chapel is laid down with various richly-tinted marbles. The hall, at the south end of the piazza, is spacious, but architecturally plain, save for two fluted columns of the Corinthian order, between which is placed a painting of a Magdalen after Guido. At the upper end is a painting, by Snyders, of a Dutch fish market; and there are portraits of the founder, by Kneller, Dr. Blechynden, the first provost, Bishops Harding and Binney, and others. The library, over the piazza, is 120 feet in length, and contains several unique bibliographical treasures and a very choice collection of Civil War tracts and pamphlets. The ancient kitchen and buttery still remain on the south side, and the small quadrangular court adjoining, though more or less altered, retains vestiges of the separate lodgings of the Benedictines, but the shields of arms are much mutilated. The extensive and well-kept gardens, lying to the west and south of the college buildings, are exceedingly beautiful, and rival, if they do not excel, those of St. John's and New College; their most attractive feature is, perhaps, the large semi-circular lake which occupies a large part of the north end; at the other extremity, an admirable view is obtained of the old buildings of Gloucester Hall, which partly enclose it on two sides. By the courtesy of the college, the gardens are at all times readily accessible to visitors. This college presents to ten benefices and has an estimated annual income of £9,415 10s.

Rev. William Inge M.A. provost; appointed in 1881.
Rev. Edwin Wallace M.A. vice-provost and librarian.
Rev. Charles Henry Olive Daniel M.A. bursar.
Thomas Watson Jackson M.A. dean.

Hertford College.

Visitor, The Chancellor of the University.

Hertford College, situated immediately opposite the principal entrance to the old schools, possesses a history neither uneventful nor uninteresting, especially in the latter years of its existence, as involving indirectly that of the old society of Hertford College, on whose site, at the corner of New College lane, it now stands, and some of the old buildings of which still remain distinguishable among the additions which they received with the transfer of Magdalen Hall from its former locality close to Magdalen College. From about 1487 to 1602, Magdalen Hall (a hostel erected by William of Waynflete, Bishop of Winchester, for the reception of students previously to their admission into Magdalen College) was used as a place of academical education, under the government of one of the Fellows of Magdalen, but at the last named date it became an independent hall. The President and Fellows of Magdalen wishing, however, to remove the site, procured Acts of Parliament (56 Geo. III. c. 95 & 56 Geo. III. c. 136) in the year 1818, authorising them to repair the decayed buildings of Hertford College for the reception of Magdalen Hall, and a serious fire, which broke out in the hall early on the morning of 9th Jan. 1820, destroying almost the whole of the northern extremity, effected such damage as more than ever to necessitate a change of locality. The history of the old Hertford College may be thus briefly related:—The Rev. Richard Newton D.D. of Christ Church, appointed in 1710 principal of Hart Hall, which then occupied the site of the present college, obtained, in August, 1740, after much opposition, a royal charter to erect Hart Hall into Hertford College, the foundation to consist of a principal and four senior fellows or tutors, and eight junior fellows who, however, were merely titular. The college, however, chiefly on account of its insufficient endowment, never flourished; and on the death of the fifth and last principal, Dr. Hodgson, in 1805, since no one statutably qualified could be induced to undertake the office; and a large portion of the buildings had, about 1816, become ruinous, the foundation ceased to exist. After the acquirement of the property by Magdalen Hall the whole of the premises were either completely renovated or rebuilt, and in 1822 that society took possession of the buildings thus restored, and re-named them as Magdalen Hall. In 1874 it was resolved to revert to the original style of Hertford College, and by a special Act (37 and 38 Vict. c. 55) the foundation of Magdalen Hall was dissolved, and the Principal and scholars thereof were, together with certain Fellows, mentioned in the Act, incorporated as a College of the University of Oxford, under the name of "The Principal, Fellows and Scholars of Hertford College, in the University of Oxford," the Principal being, as previously, appointed by the Chancellor of the University for the time being. The Society now consists of a principal, seventeen fellows, and about forty scholars. Of the fellowships, fifteen are of the annual value of £300; and two, tenable by married men, of the annual value of £250; there are also thirty scholarships of £100 yearly for five years, besides a number of others on the Lucy, Meeke, Lusby and Macbride foundations, and two exhibitions. The buildings consist of a single quadrangle, with the hall and library on the north and the chapel on the south side; the west or principal front is in the Palladian style and comprises two distinct blocks of three storeys each, standing some distance apart, but united by a high wall with a central rusticated gateway and side entrances, and was erected in 1820 from a design by Mr. Garbett, at the sole cost of Magdalen College; the remaining buildings formed part of the ancient Hart Hall and its successor, Hertford College, and of these the chapel, a plain and uninteresting structure in the Italian style, was erected by Dr. Newton, and consecrated by Dr. Potter, bishop of Oxford, 25th Nov. 1716. The hall, on the north side, is a spacious apartment and contains portraits of John Tyndale, translator of the New Testament, Lord Chancellor Clarendon, Sydenham, the physician, several bishops and others; the old refectory and buttery, still existing, with portions adjoining, were enlarged, if not wholly built, in the reign of Elizabeth, by Philip Rondell, then principal of Hart Hall; the library unites the collections of both societies and was greatly augmented in 1777 by the valuable bequest of John Cale esq. who also left an endowment of £30 yearly for the librarian. There is one benefice in the gift of the Principal, and nine other benefices held by trustees for the benefit of the college.

Rev. Henry Boyd D.D. principal; appointed in 1877.

Keble College.

Visitor, The Archbishop of Canterbury.

Keble College, situated in the Parks road and nearly opposite the University Museum, was founded in 1868 by public subscription as a memorial to the Rev. John Keble M.A. of Corpus Christi college, formerly Professor of Poetry, and author of "The Christian Year," with the additional object of providing a University Education, "in the free yet religious spirit of the ancient founders," for persons of limited means; the site, comprising about 4½ acres (with fee simple), was purchased from St. John's College for £7,007; the foundation stone laid by Archbishop Longley, April 25th, 1868; and the College, incorporated by Royal Charter, June 6th, 1870, was opened June 23rd following by the Marquess of Salisbury, Chancellor of the University, and was admitted to the privileges of the University, by decree of Convocation, April 18th, 1871. The buildings, consisting chiefly of one spacious quadrangle, with various extensions on the south side, are constructed of variegated bricks, with Bath stone dressings, in an Early style of Gothic, and have been severely criticised. The principal entrance is through a sort of gabled tower at the south-east angle, supported by deeply projecting buttresses, reaching to the roof, which is surmounted by a chimney stack; a wide vaulted archway in the lower story conducts to the broad gravelled terrace surrounding the quadrangle, on the south side of which, and immediately opposite the gateway, are the hall and library, divided from each other by a staircase, with two common rooms, lecture room and kitchen beneath; the hall, 127 by 35 feet, is one of the most capacious in Oxford, and contains portraits of the Rev. John Keble, Archbishop Longley, the present warden and J. A. Shaw Stewart esq.: the library includes that of Mr. Keble, removed here from Hursley, and here also is Mr. Holman Hunt's well-known painting, "The Light of the World," presented to the college by Mrs. Combe, widow of T. Combe esq. founder of St. Barnabas' Church. On the north side is the chapel, a lofty structure 125 feet in length, by 35 feet wide and 90 feet high, erected at a cost of upwards of £50,000, by the late William Gibbs esq. of Tyntesfield, near Bristol, who himself laid the first stone on the 25th April, 1873, and the building was opened April 26th, 1876: it consists of a sacrarium, shallow south transept, choir and a gabled ante-chapel at the west end, crowned on the south side by a group of "St. Michael vanquishing the Dragon," and on the north by a tall and plain chimney; the interior is constructed, as the rest of the edifice, of motley brickwork, and is lined with Scripture pictures in coloured mosaic, and profusely adorned with carving in variegated marbles, granite and alabaster; the whole of the windows, placed at an unusual height, are filled with stained glass, chiefly red, of the crudest and most violent tint and above spreads a vaulted ceiling, painted throughout and gilt; these decorative works, taken collectively, are intended to illustrate the successive dealings of the Creator with his Church, Patriarchal, Jewish and Christian; and follow, to some extent, the plan of "The Christian Year;" the south transept is filled with a large organ, also presented by Mr. Gibbs; the fittings are of oak and walnut wood, and the benches are arranged transversely, and not, as is usual in collegiate chapels, parallel with the sides; the external walls are relieved with niches, containing sculptured figures, one of which represents Dr. Longley, late Archbishop of Canterbury. The Warden's residence is a detached building, in the area south of the quadrangle, where also stands a clock tower and various offices. A new wing is now being built to the south of the block occupied by the college servants, and includes a bursary and steward's offices with a large lecture-room above, as well as rooms for the bursar, and eighteen undergradnates. It will form, when finished, the west side of a new quadrangle, of which the eastern side is already partly built, the northern side being formed by the hall and library. The Warden's house will thus be eventually united to the rest of the college, and the frontage towards the Parks road will then be complete: the style adopted is in keeping with the general character of the rest of the building. The foundation consists at present of a Warden, a Council of not less than nine nor more than twelve members, ten scholars, one organ scholar and four exhibitioners, and the whole internal administration and discipline of the college is lodged by the Charter of Incorporation in the hands of the Warden. The college presents to nine benefices.

Rev. Edward Stuart Talbot M.A. warden.
Rev. Walter Lock M.A. sub-warden & librarian.
Henry Offley Wakeman M.A. bursar.
Rev. Anbrey Lackington Moore M.A. dean.
Charles Harford Lloyd M.A. Mus. Bac. precentor.

THE HALLS.

"The Academical Halls now existing in Oxford are mansions for the reception of students, who live in them under discipline and instruction, and pass through the course of study to their several degrees, precisely in the same way as other students who reside in colleges;" they are not, however, like these, corporate bodies, and any endowments they may possess are held in trust for them by the University. The Chancellor is in every case the visitor. The halls are governed by the "Statuta Aularia," a code of regulations originally framed by the University and since amended by Convocation; St. Alban Hall, in pursuance of statutes recently framed by the Oxford University Commissioners, was, in October, 1882, on the resignation of the Principal, annexed to Merton College; and, with regard to the others, it is provided that on the occurrence of the next vacancy in the office of Principal, St. Mary Hall shall be the annexed to Oriel College and New Inn Hall to Balliol College; while St. Edmund Hall, it is understood, will be brought into closer union with Queen's College.

St. Mary Hall.

St. Mary Hall, situated in Oriel street, and adjoining the college of that name on the north, appears to have first been used as a place of academical education in 1333, although the earliest Principal on record does not occur till 1436: it was originally the rectory house of the parish of St. Mary the Virgin, having been given for that purpose by Henry Kelpe, of the city of Oxford, in 1239. In 1325 Edward II. gave the church with its appurtenances to Oriel College, which society in 1333 applied it to its present purpose and considerably enlarged its buildings, which have received subsequent additions and improvements from Principals King, Nowell, Dean and Hampden. The building consists of a single quadrangle, which, though not large, is one of the most attractive and picturesque in Oxford: it is entered from Oriel street by a passage way with an elegantly groined roof, and has on the north side the Principal's lodgings, and on the south the hall and chapel, built between 1632 and 1644, on the site of Bedell Hall, and now constituting the oldest existing portion; the former, occupying the lower story, was enlarged and adorned with oak carving by the present Principal, Dr. Chase, in the long vacation of 1874; the walls are lined with wainscot and the western end is entirely filled with a screen of panelled oak, pierced with two entrances, and rising to the roof, which is flat, with ribbed panelling; on the inside, within an ornamental niche, is placed a statuette in oak of the Virgin and Child; the east and south windows are filled with the shields of arms, in painted glass, of various benefactors and members of the Hall, and among the portraits are those of Lord Grenville, Chancellor of the University, 1809-34; Sir Thomas More, Chancellor of England; John Hunter, the celebrated anatomist; the Earl of Orrery, James Gibbs F.R.S. architect of the Camera Bodleiana, and a series of former Principals; the chapel, placed by a curious and unique arrangement above the hall, but extending beyond it westward, was repaired and ornamented in 1777 by the munificence of John Oswald, Bishop of Clonfert, Dromore and Raphoe, and in 1872-3 was considerably enlarged and completely restored by the present Principal, when a new screen of oak was erected, with canopied seats for the Principal and Vice-Principal, the whole of the stalls renewed in carved oak, and the coved roof panelled throughout with the same material; the east window, previously blocked by a huge modern painting, of doubtful merit, representing the Virgin and the Child, set between classic pilasters supporting a pediment, was opened and subsequently filled with fine stained glass by Mr. Clutterbuck, of Stratford, Essex, exhibiting in fifteen compartments scenes from the life of the Virgin, with the Crucifixion and Ascension above, and presented by Mrs. D. P. Chase, wife of the Principal; the remaining windows being filled with emblematical designs in outline: an elegant stone reredos has also been added and a spacious organ gallery constructed at the west end; the total cost amounted to about £1,300, which includes that of the east window (£130) and other windows; the whole was completed under the direction of J. C. Buckler esq. of Oxford, and the chapel re-opened on Whit Sunday, 1873. On the north side of the chapel is a mural monument to Dr. William King, Principal 1719-63, with a singular epitaph written by himself, and above, in a recess, a small marble urn, in which, by his direction, his heart is preserved; there are also modern brasses to the Rev. Philip Bliss D.D. Principal 1848-56; and to Mr. Reginald Hugh Wynne-Griffith, of Llanfair, Carnarvonshire, accidentally drowned near the Menai Strait, August 20, 1875. The windows of the chapel furnish, in their tracery, very good examples of the commingled styles found in late Gothic structures: the east side of the quadrangle was built by Dr. King, about 1750, and the west side, with the Principal's residence and other buildings, begun by Dr. Dean, about 1831, were completed by his successor, Dr. Hampden, afterwards Bishop of Hereford; the three rooms immediately adjoining the Principal's lodgings on the east are said to stand on the site of the building in which Dr. King sheltered the Young Pretender. The four Dyke Scholarships formerly belonging to this Hall have now been suppressed, but it retains one exhibition on the foundation of the Rev. Thomas Nowell D.D. who was Principal of the hall from 1764 to 1801, with a preference, secured to the heir of the founder, his wife or daughter. Dr. Bliss left money (nearly £100 yearly) for the repair of the Hall buildings; and specially of the Principal's lodgings, to be paid on the decease of his widow, who died in February, 1876. The estimated annual income of the hall is £1,597 15s. 3d.

Rev. Drummond Percy Chase D.D. principal, appointed in 1857.
Rev. Edwin Hatch M.A. vice-principal.

New Inn Hall.

This hall, situated in New Inn Hall street, was formerly known as Trilleck's Inn, from John Trilleck, bishop of Hereford, and Thomas Trilleck, Bishop of Rochester, who were successively owners of the property from 1349; by the latter these tenements were conveyed to William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester, and by him in 1392 to New College. New Inn Hall appears to have been first used as a place of academical education in 1438; from 1642 to 1646 it was used as a mint for melting down the plate which the several colleges and halls gave up in the service of Charles I.; and it was restored to its legitimate purposes after years of inactivity, (though the succession of principals appears never to have been broken) by the Rev. John Anthony Cramer D.D. afterwards Dean of Carlisle, who held the office of principal from 1831 to 1847, and in 1833 erected at his own expense a substantial building of stone in the Italian style; this, however, is only the south wing of the original design, which included a stately central colonnade, with six pillars of the Ionic order; in 1868 a small chapel, in the Gothic style, from designs by the late Charles Buckeridge esq. was erected by the present principal, in rear of the building.

Rev. Henry Hubert Cornish D.D. principal, appointed in 1866.

St. Alban Hall.

This hall, situated in Merton street and adjoining Merton College on the east, derived its name from Robert de St. Alban, a citizen of Oxford, who conveyed it to the nuns of Littlemore in 1230. On the dissolution of the religious houses it was given by Henry VIII. to George Owen M.D. fellow of Merton and royal physician, who conveyed it to Sir John Williams (afterwards Lord Williams of Thame) and Sir John Gresham; by them it was assigned to John Pollard and Robert Perrot esqrs. in 1547 and finally by them to the Warden and fellows of Merton College, who established it as a hall of the University. The buildings consist chiefly of one quadrangle, with a smaller court containing a singular bell-tower, of considerable antiquity, at the north west angle; the principal front was rebuilt in 1600, at the cost of Benedict Barnham, alderman of London, whose arms are carved in stone over the entrance. In 1865 it was skilfully remodelled by John Gibbs esq. of St. Mary Hall, architect, under the auspices of the late principal, when the quaint and lofty bell-turret was also restored and a chapel added on the south-west of the quadrangle. On the resignation, in October, 1882, of the Rev. William Charles Salter M.A. late principal, the Hall, by a provision of the Oxford University Commissioners, came into the possession of Merton College and was annexed to it, while the resigning Principal is to receive a pension from that society. It may now be regarded, therefore, as reverting, though under changed circumstances, to its original masters; indeed, the Principal's lodgings, which are independent of the hall and were erected in Archbishop Whately's time, are built upon land the property of Merton College, and the Principal was, in fact, tenant of the college.

St. Edmund Hall.

St. Edmund Hall, situated in Queen's lane, is believed to derive its name from Edmund le Riche, Archbishop of Canterbury in the reign of Henry III. who delivered lectures in certain schools on the same site from 1219 to 1226 and was soon after his death canonized by Pope Innocent V. In the year 1269 it was purchased by the canons of Oseney and applied to the purposes of academical education, but the records of this abbey between 1276 and 1307 having been lost, no principal's name is known previous to that of William Boys, nor is the hall expressly mentioned until the time of John de Cornubia, principal in 1317. On the dissolution of religious houses, Henry VIII. granted it to two citizens of Oxford, of whom it was purchased by William Dennyson, Provost of Queen's, who in 1557 devised it to his college, which society procured an act of congregation in 1559, confirmed by the Chancellor of the University, securing to them the perpetual right of nominating the principal of the hall. The buildings, occupying little more than three sides of an oblong quadrangle, chiefly date from the middle of the 17th century, and their quaintness and irregularity, aided by the creepers which festoon the whole north side, give to them a singularly picturesque appearance; the hall, forming part of the west side, was built in 1859-60 and contains portraits of Dr. Daniel Wilson, Bishop of Calcutta and formerly vice-principal; Dr. Tullie, principal in 1675, and several of his successors; at the east end of the quadrangle are the chapel and library, erected chiefly by the liberality of Stephen Penton B.D. principal, 1675-84; the first stone of the chapel being laid April 19, 1680, and the building consecrated and dedicated to St. Edmund, by Bishop Fell, April 7, 1682; the ante-chapel, which faces the quadrangle, is of two stories, with a panelled parapet, in the Classic style; the entrance is flanked by two lofty columns of the Corinthian order, rising through both stories and supporting a pediment; the upper story forms the library, which contains several thousand volumes, contributed by various members of the Hall; the choir, or chapel proper, bounded on the north and east by the gardens of New College, has memorial windows to Miles Branthwayte, principal 1528-30, and to Bishop Wilson, 1832; the east window has also been filled with stained glass designed by Mr. Morris, beneath which is an altar piece representing "Christ bearing His Cross." In 1821 the advowson of Gatcombe, in the Isle of Wight, was purchased by the University as an augmentation of the revenues of the principal by a benefaction under the will of the Rev. George Holme D.D. in 1763, which had accumulated in the interval. The first principal presented to it was the Rev. William Thompson D.D. who was elected to the principalship in 1848 and presented to the rectory of Gatcombe in the following year. Members of this hall are admitted to any of the lectures given in, or in connection with Queen's College. The estimated annual income of the Hall is £1,451.

Rev. Edward Moore D.D. principal, appointed in 1864; Rev. George Francis Lovell B.D. vice-principal.

Private Halls.

By a statute passed in 1855, any master of arts or other member of Convocation of at least twenty-eight years of age may, upon certain conditions, open a private hall under license from the Vice-Chancellor, with the title of "Licensed Master," for the reception and tuition of matriculated students, who shall be admissible to degrees and other privileges of the University under the same discipline and conditions as other students. There are now two of these: Charsley's Hall, in the Parks road, William Henry Charsley M.A. late of Christ Church, licensed master; and Turrell's Hall, The Willows, Magdalen bridge, Rev. Henry Joseph Turrell M.A. Hertford College, licensed master.

Unattached Students.

Under a statute passed in Act Term, 1868, students may, under certain conditions, matriculate as members of the University although unconnected with any college or hall; such persons keep their required terms of residence in houses or licensed lodgings in the town and possess the same rights and privileges with regard to the University as are enjoyed by other students. The admission of students into the University under the prescribed conditions, the conduct of their studies, and the exercise of discipline over them, are entrusted to a delegacy, consisting of the vice-chancellor, proctors, a censor, and three members of Convocation nominated by the vice-chancellor and proctors to hold office for six years. The censor, who is especially charged with the supervision of their studies and conduct, is appointed in the same way for five years, and there are also a number of tutors; Rev. George William Kitchin M.A. late student of Christ Church, censor.

AFFILIATED COLLEGES.

By a statute of the University, passed in 1880, any college or institution within the United Kingdom, or in any part of the British Dominions, being a place of education in which the majority of the students are of the age of 17 at the least, may be admitted to the privileges of an affiliated college on the conditions following:—

1. The college or institution must be incorporated by Royal Charter or otherwise established on a permanent and efficient footing.
2. It must allow the University to be represented on its governing body and to take part in its examinations.
3. It must have been admitted to the privileges of an affiliated college by vote of convocation.
4. The connexion between it and the University must be terminable at the will of either body.

The institutions at present admitted are:—

1880, June 1, St. David's College, Lampeter.

1882, June 15, University College, Nottingham.

The population in 1881 of the colleges and halls was as follows:—

OXFORD UNION.

The Oxford Union was incorporated in 1771 under a local Act, and consists of the following eleven parishes out of the total of fourteen in the city (St. Clement's, St. Giles', St. John and Cowley being in Headington union):—All Saints, Holywell or St. Cross, St. Aldate (Berks and Oxford), St. Ebbe, St. Martin, St. Mary Magdalen, St. Mary the Virgin, St. Michael, St. Peter-le-Bailey, St. Peter-in-the-East and St. Thomas. The colleges and halls are not rated with the parishes in which they are locally situate, but are rated by special Act of Parliament, the rate being paid in by the University; this does not apply to those colleges in St. Giles and St. John's parishes in Headington union. The Workhouse for the union, standing on the north side of the Cowley road, in St. Clement's parish, is an extensive pile of red and white brick with Bath stone cornices and dressings, and consists of three principal blocks parallel to each other; the central portion of the front range of buildings is of two stories, with an arched entrance, over which is a bell-cot; at a distance of 100 feet from the archway is the main building, 258 feet long and 44 feet wide, with a central corridor extending the whole length, but broken in the centre by a large hall, over which is a tower 90 feet to the vane, and serving both as a staircase and a ventilating shaft; the infirmary is placed at the back of the building on the high ground, and on the eastern side is a detached cruciform chapel; the building was erected in 1865 from designs by Mr. William Fisher, architect, of London place, St. Clement's, at a cost of £20,000. The population of the union in 1881 was 21,900; rateable value, £134,438. Board day, Thursday, at 2 p.m. at the Workhouse

PEPPARD, see ROTHERFIELD PEPPARD.

PIDDINGTON is a parish in the hundred of Bullingdon, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The village is situated at the foot of Muswell Hill, about 5½ miles south-east from Bicester and 12 north-east from Oxford, on the borders of Bucks. The church of St. Nicholas is an edifice, chiefly in the Decorated style, and consists of chancel, nave, south aisle with porch and a western battlemented tower containing 3 bells: the chancel has two very rich sedilia, and some remains of a canopy of similar character over the door, with highly wrought crockets and finials; on the north side is an elegant niche with figures of angels: the nave is separated from the aisle by an arcade of four arches, on octagonal columns; the font is of the same form, and cup-shaped; the tower is late and poor Perpendicular: a brass (loose) to Catherine, wife of Gilbert Hussay, of Oundle, 1613: the church plate includes a paten given in 1640 by William Ward, of Piddington, and a chalice and paten given by Jane White in 1683. The register dates from the year 1653. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £320 with residence, in the gift of the parishioners, and held since 1878, by the Rev. Thomas Ivens. A hermitage, with a chapel attached, dedicated to the Holy Cross, was founded in the reign of William Rufus, by one Ralph and the remains of the chapel were taken down about 1780. C. Aubrey Aubrey esq. is lord of the manor, the Duke of Buckingham, Herbert Walsh esq. Mrs. Page Fryer and Mrs. Snell are the principal landowners. The soil is principally clay; subsoil, clay. The land is pasture and arable. The area is 2,322 acres; rateable value, £2,669; the population in 1881 was 281.

PISHILL is a village and parish on the borders of Bucks, pleasantly situated in a vale 5 miles north-west from Henley and 4½ south from Watlington, in the hundred of Pyrton, union and county court district of Henley, rural deanery of Aston, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church (name unknown), situated on an acclivity near the edge of a wood, was rebuilt some years since by the late Rev. Charles Edward Ruck-Keene, then patron, and is a small and plain edifice of flint and freestone, consisting of chancel, nave, north transept or chapel, and a bell-turret containing 1 bell: the walls are Norman: the chancel has an east window of two lights of Transition character and a piscina of the same date; the chancel arch is also Norman as was the transept, forming a chapel belonging to the Stonor family, but this has been modernized. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1765; marriages, 1784. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value from tithe rent-charge £110, with residence and 30 acres of glebe, in the gift of Col. Edmund Ruck-Keene and held since 1883 by the Rev. Frederick William Orde Ward B.A. of Charsley's hall, Oxford. The charities amount to £4 15s. yearly, which is distributed in clothing and money. A short distance from the church are the remains of a chapel, now used as a barn; part of an elegant doorway remains. Lord Camoys, who is lord of the manor, and Col. Edmund Ruck-Keene J.P. are principal landowners. The soil is chalk, loam and gravel; subsoil, chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. The area is 785 acres; rateable value, £672; the population in 1881 was 204.

PYRTON (or PIRTON) is a large parish and village 1 mile north from Watlington, 9 miles south-west from Thame, 8 from Wallingford and 5 south-south-west from Tetsworth, in the hundred of Pyrton, union of Henley county court district of Thame, rural deanery of Aston, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Mary is a structure of mixed styles, with some remains of Norman work, but rebuilt in 1865 in the Early English style; it has a bell-cote containing 3 bells, and contains a few ancient monuments of little interest; the celebrated John Hampden was married in this church 24th June, 1619, to Elizabeth Simeon, only daughter of Mr. Edward Simeon, then lord of the manor, as appears from the parish register which dates from the year 1598. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £260 with residence, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, and held since 1880 by the Rev. Hilgrove Coxe M.A. of Corpus Christi college, Oxford. The poor's land of Pyrton produces £16 12s. yearly, which is distributed in money to the poor of the parish by the vicar and churchwardens on the second Sunday after Easter. The Manor House, adjoining Pyrton and close to the church, is the seat of Edward Samuel Hamersley esq. J.P.; it was built in the reign of Elizabeth. Lord Camoys, the Earl of Macclesfield and Edward Samuel Hamersley esq. D.L. are the lords of the manor of Pyrton. The principal landowners of the parish are the lords of the manor, G. Morrison esq. and Magdalen college, Oxford. The soil on hills, light loam; subsoil, chalk; below hills, rich loam; subsoil, marl and greensand. The chief crops are wheat, beans, oats, barley, turnips and mangold wurtzel. The area is 4,741 acres; rateable value, £6,233; in 1881 the population, including the hamlets, was 566.

RAMSDEN is a township and ecclesiastical parish, formed from the civil parish of Shipton-under-Wychwood in 1861, it is in the hundred of Chadlington, Witney union and county court district, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The village, about half a mile in length, is very compactly arranged and is pleasantly situated in a hollow; it is 4 miles north from Witney, 6½ from Woodstock and 3½ from Charlbury station on the Oxford, Worcester & Wolverhampton railway. The Roman road, Akeman street, passes through this parish on the south, and adjacent to it is White Oak Green, locally in Hailey, and supposed to have been a British settlement. The church of St. James is an edifice of stone in the Decorated style, consisting of chancel, nave, south aisle, organ chamber and a small square tower at the north-west angle, surmounted by an octagonal broach spire with a gable-headed spire-light on each of the cardinal faces and containing 3 bells; the aisle is divided from the nave by an arcade of four arches, supported on circular columns with moulded caps and bases: the reredos is of alabaster, inlaid with mosaic work and the east window is filled with stained glass depicting the Resurrection; there are also three stained lancet windows: the whole fabric was erected in 1872, partly by subscription; it stands on the site of the old church and is seated with open benches to hold 284 persons. The register of Ramsden, as a separate parish, dates from about 1841, entries previous to this date are included in the registers of Shipton. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £19, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1860 by the Rev. Robert Lowbridge Baker M.A. of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, who is also rector of Wilcote. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel. The village is supplied with water from a gravel bed at the north-west end of the village. The principal landowners are Lord Churchill, who is lord of the manor, the Rev. R. L. Baker, E. Tunstall esq. and Mr. William Edwards of this village. The soil is a mixture of gravel, sand and clay; subsoil, principally limestone. The chief crops are wheat, barley and roots. The area is 902 acres; rateable value, £1,398; the population in 1881 was 435.

GREAT ROLLRIGHT is a parish and village on the borders of Warwickshire, 3 miles north from Chipping Norton, in the hundred of Chadlington, Chipping Norton union and county court district, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The Banbury and Cheltenham railway (when completed) will run through this parish The church of St. Andrew is a small but ancient structure of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, nave, south aisle, south porch and a western embattled tower of Perpendicular date, with crocketed pinnacles and containing 5 bells dated 1696: the chancel is Perpendicular: it retains a very good rood-loft and screen, and all its windows are stained: south of the chancel arch are indications of a hagioscope: the south aisle is Decorated and has a rich cornice and stained windows: at its eastern end is a piscina; the south doorway is an interesting example of ancient Norman work, the arch being enriched with zigzag mouldings and beak-heads and the tympanum filled with a lozenge pattern and other curious designs; the porch, of the Decorated period, had formerly a room over it, but the intervening flooring is gone: a few yards south of this porch are the remains of the old churchyard cross; there is another Norman doorway on the side of the nave; there is a brass to James Battersby, a former rector, who died in 1522, with effigy holding chalice and wafer. The register dates from the year 1560. The living is a rectory, yearly value £250 or upwards, according to the rental of 420 acres of glebe land attached to it, with residence, in the gift of Brasenose College, Oxford, and held since 1855 by the Rev. Henry Rendall M.A. formerly fellow of that college. There are two Baptist chapels. There is a poor's estate of 81A. 2R. 26P. with cottages, yielding about £144 yearly, £50 of which is applied to the National school and the remainder distributed to the poor in clothing, fuel and money. The Principal and fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford, who are owners of the manor, the rector, Mr. R. Berry and Mr. William Hall are the principal landowners. The soil is oolite; subsoil, the same. The chief crops are wheat, barley and roots. The area is 2,360 acres; rateable value, £3,295; the population in 1881 was 388.

LITTLE ROLLRIGHT is a parish and village on the borders of Warwickshire, 3 miles north-west-by-north from Chipping Norton, in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Philip is a plain and very small building of the Perpendicular period, consisting of chancel, nave, south porch and a western embattled ivy-covered tower, built by William Brewer esq. in 1617 and containing 1 bell: it contains two canopied altar tombs, one of which has a recumbent effigy of a knight in plate armour, with emblazoned shields of arms of the Dixon family, formerly lords of the manor, and is inscribed (but undated): the other has kneeling effigies of a knight in armour of a later period, with two ladies, and is dated 1647; there are two handsome niches, with crocketed canopies, in the jambs of the east window: the nave, which is very plain, contains an ancient font. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1776; marriages, 1754; burials, 1785. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value from tithes and glebe of 6 acres, £163, with residence, in the gift of Joseph Reade esq. and held since 1871 by the Rev. John Oakley Hill M.A. of Christ Church, Oxford, who resides at Chipping Norton. In this parish are the famous Rollrich stones, locally known as the "The King's Stones," and forming part of an extremely interesting Druidical remain, of a date anterior, it is supposed, to Stonehenge: they are disposed in a circle, or according to an ancient record, "in a round of twist, thirty and forty paces over, the tallest of them all being about seven feet high; and about a bolt's shoot off (83 yards north) on the other side of the hedge, in the county of Warwick, stands one by itself nearly nine feet high;" there appear to have been originally 60 stones, but now 28 rise more than a foot above the soil: about 390 yards eastward is a group of five stones, called the "Whispering Knights," two of which have partially fallen: these taper towards the top and at one time all five leaned together: they probably constitute the remains of an altar or cromlech; the stone standing alone, and called the "King," is 8½ feet high and 5 feet 3 inches in breadth. J. Reade esq. is lord of the manor and sole landlandowner. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, the same. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans, peas and roots. The area is 780 acres; rateable value £835; the population in 1881 was 38.

ROTHERFIELD GREYS (commonly called GREYS) is a large parish, extending 6 miles, from the Thames to Nettlebed, in the hundred of Binfield, union and county court district of Henley, rural deanery of Henley and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. Part of the town of Henley is in this parish. The village is 3 miles south-west-by-south from Henley-on-Thames and 7½ north from Reading. The church (dedication unknown) is a small ancient structure of the Early English period, consisting of chancel, with a late chapel on the north side, nave and a modern belfry of wood, containing 3 bells; the chancel has an east window of 3 lights under one arch, a good piscina and a double locker: the nave walls are original and some of the Early English windows remain: the font, of the same date, is square, with angles: there is a large brass with effigy under a canopy and marginal inscription to Sir Robert de Grey, lord of this manor 1387: and in the chapel is a monument erected in 1605 by William, Earl of Banbury, consisting of a canopy, supported by black marble pillars, beneath which are the effigies of Sir Francis Knollys K.G. and his lady, by the side of whom is an infant; Sir Francis, who was treasurer of the household to Queen Elizabeth and had the custody of Mary Queen of Scots at Bolton, died 1596: on the sides of the tomb, in a kneeling position, are represented their seven sons and six daughters and the Countess of Banbury, their daughter-in-law: in the upper stage of this monument are the figures of the Earl and his Countess kneeling before a desk: the chapel was afterwards the burial place of the Stapletons and there is a mural tablet, with arms, to Sir Thomas Stapleton; elsewhere in the church is a brass inscription to Joan, wife of John Hasteyngs esq. 1537. The register dates from the year 1591. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £714 with residence, in the gift of Trinity College, Oxford, and held since 1862 by the Rev. North Pinder M.A. formerly fellow and tutor of that college; rural dean of Henley. Holy Trinity church is described under Henley. Greys Court, the seat of Sir Francis George Stapleton bart. J.P. is a fine old Elizabethan mansion, situated in a well-wooded park stocked with deer: the house forms part of a stately and spacious fortified residence, with two quadrangles, erected in the reign of King John by Walter de Grey, Archbishop of York (1191-1216), for his nephew John de Grey: in the pleasure grounds are some very interesting ruins of this once stately residence, four of the towers being still in good preservation. From the Greys the estate passed to the Lovells and then by attainder reverting to the Crown was bestowed on the family of Knollys, from whom it was purchased by the Stapletons. Sir Francis George Stapleton bart. J.P. who is lord of the manor, Lord Camoys and W. D. Mackenzie esq. are the principal landowners. The soil is chalk, loam and gravel; subsoil, chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The area is 2,910 acres; rateable value £7,788; the population in 1881 was 1,909, of which 1,179 are within the Local Board district of Henley.

ROTHERFIELD PEPPARD (commonly called PEPPARD) is a village and parish pleasantly situated 3 miles south-west-by-south from Henley-on-Thames and 6 north from Reading, consisting principally of cottages; it is in the hundred of Binfield, union and county court district of Henley, rural deanery of Henley and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford: it derives its additional name from the family of Pipard or Pypard, who held the manor, of the honour of Wallingford from the year 1225 until, in the reign of Edward II. it passed by marriage to the Botelers. The church of All Saints is a small building of the Norman period, consisting of chancel, nave, north aisle and a temporary wooden belfry at the west end: the chancel has three Norman windows and a string course, but the east window and others are Decorated; the chancel arch is Transition Norman; the font, also Norman, is cup-shaped, with cable moulding: the church was restored in the year 1875 and has sittings for 150 people. The register dates from the year 1571. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £486 with residence and 52 acres of glebe land let for £59, in the gift of Jesus College, Oxford and held since 1881 by the Rev. Robert Price Williams M.A. late fellow of that college and J.P. for County Lincoln. Here is a Congregational chapel built in 1798. The charities amount to £3 10s. yearly for distribution in money and clothing. Blounts Court, the seat of Gen. Rt. Hon. Sir William Thomas Knollys P.C., K.C.B., D.C.L., LL.D., J.P. is a square brick building, situated in a well-wooded park of 32 acres. In 1675, during the clearing out of a pond near this mansion, many large oak trees were disinterred from its bed, one of which stood upright and was only dug out whole at a depth of 60 feet; with these, at the bottom of the excavation, were found the head and antlers of a stag and two urns. Lord Camoys is lord of the manor and William Dalziel Mackenzie esq. of Fawley Court, Bucks, is the principal landowner. The soil is chalk and gravel; subsoil, chalk. The chief crops are wheat and oats. The area is 2,158 acres; rateable value, £3,830; the population in 1881 was 484.

Parish Clerk, George Jones.

ROUSHAM is a parish and small village situated in a valley 5 miles north-east from Woodstock and nearly one mile south from the Heyford station of the Birmingham and Oxford railway, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Woodstock, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The river Cherwell and the Oxford canal pass through the parish. The church of St. James is a plain stone building of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, south chantry chapel, nave, south aisle, south porch and an embattled western tower containing a fine peal of 6 bells: within a niche in the chantry chapel are the effigies of Michael Dormer, who died 1581 and his wife Elizabeth Goddard, both of which effigies were removed from Steeple Barton church in 1851, and there are also a number of floor stones and mural tablets to the Dormer family: the chancel is Decorated, with a good piscina of that style; the chancel arch and one next to it in the arcade are Transition Norman; the other two arches, with the aisle, are of the former period, as is also the tower, which has a deeply recessed arch opening to the nave and a west door. The register dates from the year 1544. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £240 with residence, in the gift of C. W. Upton-Cottrell-Dormer esq. and held since 1873 by the Rev. Charles Henry Faithfull M.A. of Lincoln College, Oxford. Rousham House, erected in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, is an embattled mansion situated near the church and contains a large hall, a fine library with some extremely valuable manuscripts, family portraits by Vandyck and Reynolds, some admirable pictures and a good collection of works of art; the grounds, bounded by the river Cherwell, contain some large beeches, and the gardens, described by Walpole as "Daphne in little," are diversified with groves and cascades and are generally laid out in the Italian style; the estate was possessed by the Dormers for a considerable period, it afterwards passed to the Cottrells, who assumed the additional name of Dormer and now is in the possession of Charles Walter Upton-Cottrell-Dormer esq. lord of the manor and sole landowner. The soil is stone brash and deep loam; subsoil, stone brash. The land is wood, arable and pasture. The area is 920 acres; rateable value, £2,040; the population in 1881 was 156.

SALFORD is a parish and village 2 miles west-north-west from Chipping Norton, in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Mary, restored and partly rebuilt in 1855 from designs by the late G. E. Street esq. R.A. is a stone edifice consisting of chancel, nave, north aisle, south porch and a western embattled tower containing 5 bells dated 1687; the north and south doorways and font are Norman, but the rest of the building is chiefly in the Early English style, except the east and west windows, which are Geometrical, and those of the south side of the nave, which are Perpendicular; in the jamb of the easternmost of these is a fine niche and canopy: the nave and aisle are separated by an arcade of three arches: in the tympanum of the north door is a cross in a circle with a lion and centaur on either side: the tower is late Decorated and has a good square stair turret: in the north aisle are two mural tablets to members of the Bolter family, dated 1640 and 1694: the stained east window of the chancel is a memorial to the Rev. Richard Skillicorne Skillicorne, rector, 1834; and Anna Maria his wife, 1856; erected by their son, William Nash Skillicorne, in 1873: the base and part of the shaft of the ancient churchyard cross still remain. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1756; marriages, 1754. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £350 with residence and 220 acres glebe, in the gift of W. Nash Skillicorne esq. and held since 1871 by the Rev. Richard Nash Bricknell, of St. Aidans. There is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel. A small charity, the interest of £200, is given away in bread every St. Thomas' day by the rector and churchwardens. On the roadside, going towards Chipping Norton, are the remains of the base of a wayside cross. W. G. Dawkins esq. is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil is stone brash, clay and peat; subsoil, stone and marl. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats, beans and roots. The area is 1670 acres; rateable value, £2,437; the population in 1881 was 378.

SANDFORD ST. MARTIN is a village and parish 7 miles north-west from Woodstock, 4¾ west-by-north from Heyford station on the Great Western railway, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Woodstock, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Martin, restored in 1845, consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, south porch and a Perpendicular western embattled tower containing 5 bells, three of which are respectively dated 1695, 1630 and 1629: the nave has Transition Norman arches in the north aisle and Early English in the south; the clerestory has Perpendicular windows; the south aisle is of the Transition period from Decorated to Perpendicular, with a very rich Decorated piscina and the south porch retains a stoup: the chancel was restored and a stained window inserted in 1856 at the cost of the late Edwin Guest D.C.L.; it retains a small piscina and has a screen of Perpendicular work, of which only the upper portion, with the arms of Queen Elizabeth, A.D. 1602, on an ermined ground, is now left: the font is octagonal and cup-shaped, with Norman carving in the upper part, and there is an hour-glass stand of iron: at the north-west corner of the churchyard is a lych-gate, designed by the late G. E. Street R.A. and erected in 1863: there are mural and other monuments in the church to Thomas Gyles gent. 1637; Mary, wife of John Yate, 1694; John, son of John Lock gent. 1714; and John Lock, jun. gent. 1775; besides another of the same name, 1711; Gerrard Croker esq. 1733; William Croker esq. 1710 and Sarah his wife, 1709, and others of later date. The register dates from the year 1695. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £175 with residence, to which the Duke of Marlborough has one turn of presentation in three and the Rev. E. Marshall the other two, and held since 1841 by the Rev. Thomas Curme B.A. of Worcester College, Oxford. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel. There are allotments of 29A. 1R. and a stone pit of 1A. 1R. 34P. in extent, producing £42 yearly for fuel, which is distributed to the poor. The village cross dates from the thirteenth century and was repaired from a design by the late George E. Street esq. R.A. in 1856. In the Cow Ground, on Brandon farm, is a spring, once famous for its medicinal qualities, but now disused; the farm-house itself has some portions of Elizabethan date; the south side was built in 1705. A portion of land in the village is still called "the Beacon field." Sandford Park is the residence of Mrs. Guest; the mansion is situated in a park of over 100 acres. The Rev. Edward Marshall M.A. who is lord of the manor, Mrs. Guest and M. P. W. Boulton esq. who owns the farms of Grove Ash and Hobbs Hole, are the principal landowners. The soil is oolite; subsoil, stone brash, lias, clay and marlstone. The land is pasture, arable and woodland. The area is 2,244 acres; rateable value, £3,262; the population in 1881 was 485.

Ledwell is a small hamlet in this parish and one mile from the village. The Park, the property of Mrs. Guest, formerly contained a large and handsome residence, occupied by Henry, third son of James, duke of Monmouth, and created Earl of Deloraine in 1706, whose remains are buried in the parish churchyard. There was formerly a chapel at Ledwell, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. Ledwell House, at present occupied by Frank Joseph Pearce esq. formerly known as Peyto's, was the residence of Admiral James Sayer, a distinguished officer on the West Indian station, who died in 1776, and to whom there is a monument in Sandford church. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel here.

SANDFORD-UPON-THAMES is a parish in the hundred of Bullingdon, union of Abingdon, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Cuddesdon, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 3¼ miles south-south-east from Oxford and a quarter of a mile from Littlemore station on the Great Western Railway and is bounded on the west by the river Isis, which separates it from Berkshire. The church of St. Andrew, built by Gerri de Planastre, soon after the Conquest, is a plain Norman structure, consisting of chancel and nave and a western tower containing 4 bells, two of which are dated 1592 and 1606: the church underwent considerable repair and alteration in 1840, under the direction of Mr. Derick, architect, when the nave roof was raised, several new windows inserted, and the western tower built: it was further restored in A.D. 1865 by James Brook esq. of Serle street, London: over the reading desk is a curious carving in alabaster, representing the Assumption of the Virgin, who appears in a devotional attitude, habited in a long loose robe, and entirely surrounded with glory, while on either side are attendant angels; it was dug up in the churchyard in 1723, with its face downwards, and is assumed to be fifteenth century work: over the church porch is a tablet inscribed "Condidit me domina Eliza Isham anno gratiæ, 1652, Porticus Patrona." "Thankes to thy charitie religiouse dame which found me Old & made me New agane." The fittings throughout the church were sometime since remodelled, some of the old benches with carved poppy-heads, dating from 1630, being preserved; the walls are those of the original building, and in the nave the earliest portions are the north and south doors and a Norman window; the font, large and plain, has been assigned to the thirteenth century; in the chancel, on the north side, is a plain recess, and below this an altar tomb; on the south side is a similar tomb, but of later date, with debased Arabesque carving, and above a mural monument with arms, to Sir William Powell of Tutbury, Staffordshire, erected in 1661. The register dates from 1572. The living is a vicarage, yearly value £75 in the gift of Mrs. Hussey, and held since 1877, by the Rev. Edgar Dyke Whitmarsh D.C.L., M.A. of Worcester College, Oxford. Amand Mahieu's charity of £11 is for clothing. About 1274 the Preceptory of Knights Templars, founded at Cowley by the Empress Maud, was removed to Sandford, and in 1309, on the suppression of that order, was transferred to the Knights Hospitallers, but on the dissolution of monastic houses, it was granted in 1542 to Edward Powell. A farm-house north-west of the church has been regarded as the remains of the old Preceptory; it retains some slight traces of Early English work in that part which was formerly the chapel, including a portion of the east window; in the garden is a gateway with the date 1614, and fragments of architectural ornament, including a shield bearing a cross pattée, the badge of the Templars. There is good fishing here for pike, perch and roach. Mrs. Hussey is lady of the manor and the principal landowner. The soil is loam; subsoil, clay. The chief crops are wheat, beans and oats. The area is 1,680 acres; rateable value, £1,874; the population in 1881 was 318.

SARSDEN is a parish and village 4 miles south-west from Chipping Norton, 2½ from Chipping Norton junction, in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The river Evenlode skirts the parish on the south. The church of St. James is a small cruciform structure of Jacobean date, and consists of chancel and nave, with short transepts and a bell turret above the north transept, containing one small bell. The register dates from the year 1575. The living is a rectory, annexed to the vicarage of Churchill, joint yearly value £262 with residence and 298 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Earl of Ducie and held since 1868 by the Rev. William Edward Dickson Carter M.A. of New College, Oxford J.P. (Oxon), official principal of the archdeacon of Oxford, rural dean of Chipping Norton, and surrogate. The poor's stock of about £4 yearly is distributed in money. There is an ancient wayside cross in the parish and some remains of a British or Danish camp, and a barrow. The Earl of Ducie P.C. is lord of the manor and sole landowner and resides occasionally at Sarsden House, which is a handsome mansion, principally of the Ionic order, standing in a park of about 40 acres. The soil is stone brash, clay and sand; subsoil the same. The area is 1,368 acres; rateable value, £2,066; the population in 1881 was 156.

SHENINGTON is a village and parish on the borders of Warwickshire, 6 miles west-north-west from Banbury and 29 north-west from Oxford, in the hundred of Bloxham, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of South Kineton and archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester. This parish was formerly a detached portion of Gloucestershire, but by the Acts 2 and 3 Wm. IV. cap. 64, and 7 and 8 Vict. cap. 61, it was annexed to Oxfordshire. The Sorbrook separates this parish from Alkerton. The church of the Holy Trinity, situated on elevated ground, is an edifice of the Decorated and Perpendicular periods, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, south aisle with porch, and an embattled western tower containing 5 bells. The church was restored in 1879 at an outlay of £1,500. A very fine Norman arch, formerly connecting the nave and chancel, enriched with zigzag mouldings, now leads to the vestry on the north side of the chancel, which retains a sedile and piscina with canopies; the rood-loft stairs are also entire; in the exterior wall of the south aisle is the figure of an ecclesiastic, within a Decorated niche and on the eastern gable of the nave is a bell turret. The early registers were burnt in 1721; the existing register of baptisms and burials commences from that date, and that of marriages from 1726. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value from glebe £340 with residence, in the gift of the Earl of Jersey and held since 1869 by the Rev. Arthur Blythman M.A. of Balliol College, Oxford. Here is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists. The charities are £5 yearly for distribution in bread and money. Oriel College, Oxford, owns the manorial rights. The principal landowners are Oriel College and W. B. Lowe esq. The soil is red loam; subsoil, rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The area is 1,542A. 2R. 23P.; rateable value, £2,623; the population in 1881 was 385.

SHILTON is a parish and village 2½ miles south-east-by-east from Burford and 3 from either Bampton or Alvescot stations and 7 from Witney: it is in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. Part of this parish was in Berkshire, but by the Acts 2 and 3 William IV. cap 64, and 7 and 8 Vict. cap. 61, it was annexed to Oxfordshire. The village stands in a valley, through which runs a rippling brook. The church (dedication unknown) is an ancient structure, consisting of chancel, nave, south aisle, north porch and a small western embattled tower, of Perpendicular date, containing 3 bells; the chancel is Early English with a good three-light east window in the Decorated style and on the south side a low side window, beneath which is an ambry; on the same side is a piscina of Early English date, and priest's door, now blocked, of the same period; on the north side is a locker: the nave is separated from the aisle by two plain Norman arches on round pillars: in the aisle is a hagioscope and near it a good Early English piscina: the porch is plain Norman, with a Perpendicular doorway inserted in a Norman opening; the font a fine example of Norman work, consisting of a massive square block on a pedestal of the same form with shafts at the angles, and is enriched with sculptures of the Passion on each side, together with niches containing figures of the four Evangelists. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1662, marriages 1701, burials 1669. The living is a discharged vicarage, net yearly value, £150, with residence, in the gift of the trustees of the late Rev. Arthur Neate and now vacant. There is a Congregational chapel, also a Baptist chapel built in 1830. W. H. Fox esq. J.P. H. Wyndham esq. who is lord of the manor, W. J. Smith, esq. and Mrs. Maisey, are the principal landowners. The soil is principally stone brash; subsoil, soft stone and clay. The chief crops are the usual cereals. The area is 1,595 acres; rateable value, £1,796; the population in 1881 was 287.

SHIPLAKE is a parish pleasantly situated on the left bank of the Thames with a station on the Henley branch of the Great Western railway, 2½ miles south from Henley-on-Thames and 4½ north-east from Reading, on the high road from the former to the latter, in the hundred of Binfield, union and county court district of Henley, rural deanery of Henley and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The village, placed on a chalky eminence overhanging the river commands a fine prospect of the woodland scenery of the adjoining county of Berks and the Surrey hills beyond. The Loddon, celebrated by Pope under the name "Lodona," enters the Thames near Shiplake lock; the nearest bridge up the river is at Sonning, distant 2½ miles, and down, at Henley, 3¾ miles. The church of SS. Peter and Paul is a structure of flint and stone with arches and columns of chalk in various styles from the Transition Norman period downwards, consisting of chancel, nave, aisles, and a square tower containing 6 bells and a clock: in general, the church is of the Decorated era, but the arches of the nave arcades are Transition Norman, the south aisle being Early English and the font Decorated: there is an Early English piscina in the south aisle and many ancient floor tiles remain: there is a brass to John Symonds and Jane, his wife, c. 1540, and a memorial to Mr. Plowden with a fine bust: the church was rebuilt in 1869 with a chancel and organ chamber added, from plans by the late George E. Street esq. R.A. at a cost of £3,713 6s. 11d.; the bells were re-hung and a new one added: there are seven stained windows filled with ancient glass brought from the church of the Abbey of St. Bertin at St. Omer. Mr. Alfred Tennyson, the poet laureate, was married in this church. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1672; marriages, 1674. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £136 with residence, in the gift of the Dean and Canons of Windsor and held since 1806 by the Rev. John Climenson LL.M. of Trinity College, Cambridge, and surrogate. There are four cottages and gardens in this parish, the rents of which, £37 yearly, are applied to the repairs of the church, after payment of £5 to the clerk. Crowsley Park is the seat of Major John Baskerville J.P.; the mansion, built in the reign of James II. is a fine building of red brick with an embattled parapet and square towers surrounded by avenues of fine trees, one of which in the rear of the tower is a mile in length: the park, in which are kept 200 head of deer, is 200 acres in extent, thickly wooded and noted for its fine cedar and oak trees. Major John Baskerville J.P. is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil is gravel; subsoil, chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and peas. The area is 2,692 acres; rateable value, £4,838; the population in 1881 was 615.

SHIPTON-ON-CHERWELL is a parish and small village within the parliamentary borough of Woodstock, 2½ miles east from Woodstock, 1 north from Woodstock Road station and 6½ north by west from Oxford, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Woodstock, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The river Cherwell and the Oxford canal flow on the east of the parish. The church of St. Mary the Virgin, rebuilt, with the exception of the chancels, in 1820, consists of chancel, nave, north porch, and a western embattled tower containing 2 bells: in the north wall of the chancel, which is Decorated, is a sepulchral recess, enclosing a stone coffin with a coped lid, bearing a Calvary cross: Skelton, in his "History of Oxfordshire," mentions that it was opened about the beginning of the eighteenth century, when the skeleton of a little man holding a pewter chalice, with a lid on it was found: the east window of three lights exhibit features of the transition from Decorated to Perpendicular: the basin of the font is Early Norman and was restored in 1879: in the churchyard is the shaft of an ancient cross: the interior of the church was thoroughly restored in 1869. The register dates from the year 1653. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £307 with residence, in the gift of the Duke of Marlborough K.G. and held since 1874 by the Rev. Henry William Yule B.D., B.C.L. of Wadham College, Oxford, domestic chaplain to the Duke of Marlborough and vicar of Hampton Gay. The rectory house, a little to the northward of the church, was considerably altered and improved in 1875. The Duke of Marlborough, who is lord of the manor, and New College, Oxford, are the principal landowners. The soil is mixed; subsoil, mixed. The land is chiefly arable. The area 1,058 acres; rateable value, £1,705; the population in 1881 was 115.

SHIPTON-UNDER-WYCHWOOD is a township and parish in the hundred of Chadlington, unions and county court districts of Chipping Norton and Witney, rural deanery of Chipping Norton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, comprising the districts of Leafield and Ramsden, and the townships of Milton, Lyneham and Langley. Shipton is 4 miles north-north-east from Burford, 8 from Witney and 7 from Chipping Norton with a station on the West Midland railway half a mile north-east from the village. The river Evenlode intersects the parish; the village is lighted with gas. The church of St. Mary is a large and fine structure of mixed styles, consisting of chancel with a chapel on each side, clerestoried nave, aisles and a western tower with spire, containing 5 bells, a sanctus bell and a clock: the east stained window of five lights, designed by the late G. E. Street esq. R.A. has good geometrical tracery and was filled with stained glass in 1874; there is another stained window in the chancel, inserted in 1852 to Robert Phillimore M.A. 38 years vicar: on the south side are modern sedilia and piscina in the Decorated style and above the latter is an ancient niche containing small male and female kneeling effigies in Tudor costume: the vestry, placed on the north side, also contains a piscina: a noble Early English arch with clustered shafts separates the nave and chancel; the nave is of three bays with wide Early English arches on round pillars; the north aisle is Early Perpendicular; the opposite aisle and piers, the clerestory and porch are of later date and the latter has groined vaulting, above which is a parvise and in front two good Perpendicular niches with mutilated figures apparently representing "The Annunciation" and "The Virgin and Child:" the tower is Early English and has an octagonal broach spire with pinnacles at the angles and gabled spire lights, each surmounted by a large grotesque figure as a finial; the west doorway is a most beautiful example of the same style: in the north aisle and north bay of the chancel are two Decorated recesses or Easter sepulchres and near these is a brass with recumbent female effigy in shroud, with a shield of arms and inscription of 12 English verses to Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Jane and wife of Edmund Horne ob. 1548: there are a number of mural and other monuments to the Reade family, dating from the seventeenth century: the pulpit and font, both Perpendicular, are octagonal and panelled; in one of the panels of the latter is carved the bear and ragged staff: the church was completely restored in 1859 from plans by the late G. E. Street esq. R.A. The register dates from the year 1538. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £330 with residence and 85 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1868 by the Rev. Henry Barter M.A. of Merton College, Oxford, and surrogate. Here is a Baptist chapel. On the farm of Mr. T. Brookes are the remains of an ancient ecclesiastical building, probably a Prebendal house. Opposite the "Crown inn" is a handsome memorial cross erected to the natives of this parish who perished with the ship "Cospatrick" in 1874. The charities for distribution in clothing bread, fuel and money amount to £58 yearly, derived principally from the rent of the "Crown inn" and adjoining land, devised by an ancient will for distribution by 12 trustees, viz. 6 residents of the township and 6 residents of the township of Milton-under-Wychwood; there is also an annual sum of £21 7s. 6d. for public uses. Shipton Court, the residence of Cecil Samuda esq. is a fine old mansion, pleasantly situated in the village. Shipton Lodge is the residence of Joseph Reade esq. who is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. The entire area of the parish, which includes a large tract of Wychwood forest, is 11,652 acres; of the townships, exclusive of Leafield and Ramsden, 6,846 acres; rateable value, £11,771; the population in 1881 was 1,832. The township of Shipton: area, 2,520 acres; rateable value, £4,537; population in 1881, 724.

Parish Clerk, Philip Coombes.

Langley is a township 2 miles south-east in the union of Chipping Norton and county court district of Witney. Lord Churchill is lord of the manor. The area is 303 acres; rateable value, £328; the principal landowners are the Crown and Lord Churchill; the population in 1881 was 50; & telegraph office, Shipton Railway station

SHIRBURN is a parish and village, one mile north-east from Watlington, 8 south-west from Thame, and 6 south-west from Tetsworth, in the hundred of Pyrton, union and county court district of Thame, rural deanery of Aston, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of All Saints, originally Norman, situated in the grounds of and close to the castle, is an ancient structure of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, aisles, transepts, vestry, and an embattled Norman tower containing 2 bells and a clock, the nave arcades are Early English and the tower, originally Norman, has much inserted work of later date, and an upper stage of debased character: the church contains several fine monuments, and brasses to Richard Chamberleyn esq. of "Cootys," Northants (1493), and his wife Sybyll (Fowler), with seven children; and to William Bouldre, 1498, and his wife Joan, the latter being an inscription only: the building was thoroughly restored and re-seated in the year 1876, by the Earl of Macclesfield, at a cost of £3,000 when a new organ was erected. The stained east window, was the gift of the Countess of Macclesfield. The register dates from the year 1587. The living is a vicarage, net value £175, with 4¾ acres of glebe, let for £23, in the gift of the Earl of Macclesfield and held since 1878 by the Rev. William Osborn Bird Allen M.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge, who resides at the adjoining village of Pyrton. Shirburn Castle, the seat of the Earl of Macclesfield, is an ancient embattled structure, rectangular in plan with circular battlemented towers at each angle, and is surrounded by a wide moat and is approached by a drawbridge, which conducts to the principal entrance, opening into a spacious vaulted hall; the park, comprising 225 acres, has fine avenues of trees. The Earl of Macclesfield has a model farm of about 600 acres, including the park pasture, under the management of his lordship's land steward, and here are also the kennels of the South Oxfordshire fox hounds, of which his lordship is master. The principal landowners are the Earl of Macclesfield, who is lord of the manor, and Major Fane. The soil below hills is fine loam; subsoil, chalk; on the hills flint and clay. The chief crops are wheat, beans, oats and barley. The area is 2,378 acres; rateable value, £2,366; the population in 1881 was 314.

SHORTHAMPTON is a chapelry and township in the parish of Charlbury, 2 miles north-west from Charlbury station and 5 south from Chipping Norton, in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Chipping Norton, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The river Evenlode flows through and is crossed by two bridges—one from Shorthampton to Chadlington and the other connects Chilson and Pudlicott. The church of All Saints is a small and plain structure of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, nave, and a bell turret over the chancel arch containing 1 bell: the chancel was rebuilt about 1820, and has a modern east window; the chancel arch, on the south side of which is a large blocked hagioscope is Early English, the nave, considerably wider than the chancel, has Norman north wall, retaining one small original window; the south doorway and windows are Perpendicular. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1650; marriages, 1656; and burials, 1773. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Charlbury, joint net yearly value £800, in the gift of St. John's College, Oxford, and held since 1874 by the Rev. Charles Frederick Cumber West B.D. late fellow of that college, and surrogate, who resides at Charlbury. Pudlicot house, a plain stone building, approached through an avenue of trees and standing in a well-timbered park of about 80 acres, the seat of Samuel Burnham Dudley esq. The principal landowners are Lord Churchill, who is lord of the manor, W. Capel esq. and Samuel Burnham Dudley esq. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, brash rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley and roots. The area is 614 acres; rateable value, £504 18s.; the population in 1871 was 247.

CHILSON and PUDLICOT are hamlets, the former 1 mile west-south-west of the village; the latter 1½ miles west-north-west.

SOULDERN is a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 7 miles north-west from Bicester, 7 miles south-east from Banbury and one mile and a half from Aynho station on the Great Western railway. The river Cherwell bounds the parish on the west, but is a mile and a half from the village, which is pleasantly situated on the south side of Aynho Park, on the borders of Northamptonshire. The church of St. Mary is an ancient stone structure of various styles, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, south aisle, porch and a tower of Early Norman date, having walls of considerable thickness, and containing 4 bells and a sanctus bell: the nave is separated from the south aisle by three pointed arches resting on round columns, the capitals and bases of which are Norman and appear to have been reversed: the windows of the aisle are elaborate specimens of Late Decorated work: the porch is of the same date: the chancel is modern: since the 4th December, 1878, this interesting old church has undergone substantial restoration: the western gallery, which entirely concealed a massive Roman arch, and a very marked feature of the original church, has been removed; the pillars and arches of the arcade have been scraped and cleaned: stained windows have been inserted in the chancel and in the west window: Sir William Throckmorton bart. has also restored a brass in the chancel to John Throckmorton, one of his ancestors, 1537; there are two other brasses, one to Thomas Warner, parson, 1508 (or 1514); and a third of a heart with scrolls: in the nave are some old carved benches: a small addition has been made to the churchyard. The register dates from the year 1668. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £600 with residence and 125 acres of glebe, in the gift of St. John's College, Cambridge, and held since 1835 by the Rev. Lawrence Stephenson D.D. formerly fellow of that college. The rectory house, situated north of the church, is a picturesque Elizabethan building, surrounded by fine lime trees. The Catholic chapel of St. Joseph, built in lieu of one formerly attached to the Manor house, was erected and endowed by the Cox, Dolman and Stapleton families late in the seventeenth century. Here is also a chapel for Wesleyans. The parochial charities produce an annual amount of about £43 for distribution in bread and clothing. There are stone quarries in and adjoining the parish. Wordsworth, the poet, was a constant visitor here during the incumbency of his college friend the late Rev. Robert Jones and here he composed a sonnet on Souldern rectory, entitled "On a Parsonage in Oxfordshire." Some Saxon remains, consisting of urns, brass straps and bone ornaments, have been dug up in the neighbourhood and are in the possession of Sir H. E. Leigh Dryden bart. William Duke of Suffolk, killed in 1449, held with Alice his wife a portion of the lands. The landowners are R. S. Cox esq. of Broxwood Court, Herefordshire, W. C. Cartwright esq. M.P. of Aynho, John Rowland Crook, J. Hill Gough, barrister-at-law, and John Hill esqs. The soil is fertile, clay and loam near the Cherwell, sand and stone brash on the high ground; the subsoil varies at different points of the parish, and consists of limestone, iron stone, clay, sand and gravel, divided into arable and pasture. The area is 1,451 acres; rateable value, £3,433; the population in 1881 was 515.

SPELSBURY, situated on the Evenlode, with the hamlets of DEAN, DITCHLEY, FULWELL and TASTON, form a parish in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Chipping Norton, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. Spelsbury village is 1½ miles from Charlbury station and 5 south-east from Chipping Norton. The church of All Saints is a very ancient edifice, apparently forming part of a much larger Norman cruciform structure of which now only the tower and chancel exist; the latter with its north and south aisles, separated by arcades of two arches, constitutes the existing nave; the present chancel being either a subsequent addition or a lady chapel enlarged and converted into a chancel: the building has a singular appearance, the nave and aisles being very wide in proportion to their length and the chancel long and narrow: the body of the church is Early English and has a clerestory of four lights and two shallow transepts which appear to have been small chapels of fourteenth century date: in the tower is a western doorway of Decorated work, and on either side are blocked Early English arches formerly leading to the nave aisles; the upper story of the tower has been rebuilt with the addition of pinnacles, and contains 6 bells of which the tenor is dated 1788, and inscribed "All ye who hear me sing, be faithful to your God and King:" the notorious John Wilmot, Earl of Rochester, who died at the Ranger's Lodge, in Woodstock Park, July 26th, 1680, was buried in a vault under the north aisle of this church, together with his son Charles, who died in 1681; on the north side of the chancel is an altar tomb of black and white marble with a canopy supporting emblematic figures and shields of arms; and recumbent effigies of Sir Henry Lee, knight and bart. of Ditchley, 1631, and his wife Eleanor (Wortley); beneath it three sons and four daughters, some of these kneeling at the head and foot of the tomb; under the canopy is a long Latin inscription, and on the tomb itself two tablets with 15 English verses; here also is a canopy of marble, with figures of angels, arms, and elaborately carved foliage, inscribed to Robert, fourth and last Earl of Litchfield, 1776, and Catherine (Stonehouse) his wife; on the south side of the chancel is a monument of grey and white marble with the arms of Lee impaling Fitzroy, coronet and supporters, and inscribed to Edward Henry, first Earl of Litchfield, and Baron of Spelsbury, 1716, and Charlotte Fitzroy his wife, natural daughter of King Charles II. 1718; on the same side is a lofty monument of marble with a sarcophagus and a variety of emblematic sculptures, designed by H. Keene, architect, to George Henry, third Earl of Litchfield, and Chancellor of Oxford University, 1772, and Diana (Frankland) his Countess, 1779: in the north transept is an altar-tomb with recumbent effigy to Charles Henry, 14th Viscount Dillon, 1865. The register dates from the year 1539. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £243 with residence and 121 acres of glebe, in the gift of Christ Church, Oxford, and held since 1856 by the Rev. Thomas Childe Barker M.A. formerly student of Christ Church. There are four almshouses for four old people, erected by John Carey, of Walcott, and endowed with £10 10s. yearly. The church plot produces 12s. a year for church purposes. In the centre of the village is a very handsome fountain, erected by Harriet Dowager Viscountess Dillon, and mother of the present Viscount Dillon, in memory of her third son Constantine Augustus, who was drowned in New Zealand in 1853. The principal landowners are Viscount Dillon, who is lord of the manor, and Christ Church and Oriel College, Oxford. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, brash rock and clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley and roots; the area is 3,900 acres; rateable value, £4,697; the population in 1881 was 540.

Dean is a hamlet of Spelsbury, three-quarters-of-a-mile north-west, and chiefly the property of Oriel College, Oxford. Within this hamlet is a monolith, called the "Hawk Stone."—Letters through Enstone. The nearest money order office is at Chadlington & telegraph office at Charlbury Ditchley the "dykefield," is a hamlet of Spelsbury, about 2½ miles east, and contains the seat of Viscount Dillon, of whom Sir Henry Lee, the first bart. who is buried in the church and mentioned by Sir Walter Scott in "Woodstock," was an ancestor. Ditchley House is a noble stone mansion in the Italian style, standing in a fine wooded park of 300 acres; the pleasure grounds and gardens near the mansion are artistically designed and very attractive.

Taston is a hamlet to Spelsbury, half a mile north-east. Here is a very ancient stone wayside cross and a fountain erected to the memory of the late Dowager Viscountess Dillon by her family; and immediately adjacent, standing by the roadside, is a monolith, believed to be that from which the hamlet derives its name, "Taston" being unquestionably a corruption of "Thor's stan," or "the stone of Thor the car-borne god of thunder," and one of the chief of the Saxon deities.——Letters through Enstone. STADHAMPTON is a parish 8 miles south-east from Oxford, 6 east from Culham station on the Great Western railway, and 8 south-west from Thame, bounded on the west by the river Thame, in the hundred of Dorchester, union and county court district of Abingdon, rural deanery of Cuddesdon, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, on the road from Thame to Shillingford. The church of St. John the Baptist is a small structure with a north aisle of Perpendicular date, the rest of the building being of a more or less modern character; it consists of chancel, nave, aisles and a tower surmounted by four pinnacles and containing 4 bells, all cast in 1621 by Henry Knight: arcades of three arches divide the nave and aisles: the pulpit and reading-desk are dated 1611, and there are some benches with the date 1636: the font is plain and round; there are brasses to John Wylmot the younger, 1508, and Alys, his wife; and to Dorothy Clarke, 1645: it was thoroughly restored in 1877 at a cost of about £1,300. The register dates from the year 1557, and includes entries for the parish of Chiselhampton. The living is a vicarage consolidated with that of Chiselhampton, joint net yearly value £165, including four Oxford Canal shares, bequeathed to the consolidated living by the late Charles Peers D.C.L. with residence and 280 acres of glebe, in the gift of J. W. Peers esq. and held since 1881 by the Rev. George Barrow Pennell M.A. of Trinity College, Dublin. The Particular Baptists have a place of worship here. The principal landowners are J. W. Peers esq. who is lord of the manor, Oriel College, Oxford, and T. Franklin esq. The soil is gravelly; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and beans. The area is 620 acres; rateable value, £1,341; the population in 1881 was 248.

STANDLAKE is a large village and straggling parish 8 miles west from Oxford, 5 south-east from Witney station and about 4½ south from South Leigh station, both on the East Gloucestershire branch of the Great Western railway, in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, and is situated on the river Windrush, which falls into the Isis about 1½ miles south of the village, and forms its southern boundary, dividing this county from Berkshire. The church of St. Giles is an ancient cruciform structure of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, transepts, clerestoried nave, aisles, south porch and a small octagonal western tower of Early Decorated character, with pierced trefoiled parapet and an octagonal spire containing 5 bells: the chancel is Early Decorated; the chancel arch, resting on corbels, is Transition Norman: the aisles are divided from the nave by four Early English arches on either side, supported by round pillars on the south and octagonal on the north side: the clerestory is lighted by eight Perpendicular windows; outside, in the south wall of the chancel, is a small sepulchral recess of Early English work; the chancel also contains various mural monuments to the Strickland and Western families and a brass is recorded to Joan, wife of John Gaunte, 1465. The registers, which were well kept all through the Commonwealth, date from the year 1560. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £456 (private benefaction) with residence, in the gift of the President and fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford, and held since 1876 by the Rev. Lewis Stacey Tuckwell M.A. late chaplain of that college. Here are Primitive Methodist and Baptist chapels. The charities for distribution in bread and money amount to £105 yearly. Traces of the remains of a British settlement, discovered about 1857, a model of which in the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford, may still be seen. Cokethorpe Park, the seat of Mrs. Strickland, is partly in this parish and partly in Hardwick, Ducklington, which see. The President and scholars of Magdalen College are lords of the manor. The principal landowners are Mrs. Strickland, Magdalen College and John Perry esq. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, beans, barley, oats and turnips. The area is 2,245 acres; rateable value, £3,863; the population in 1881 was 707.

STANTON HARCOURT is a parish and village situated amid fine woodland scenery 3 miles south-west from Eynsham railway station, 2 south from South Leigh railway station, both on the East Gloucestershire branch of the Great Western railway, 9 west from Oxford and 5 south-east from Witney, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Woodstock, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, and is situated near the river Windrush and separated from Berkshire by the Isis, which is crossed at Bablocke-Hythe, 2 miles east, by a ferry. The church of St. Michael is a noble cruciform building of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, nave, transepts, north porch and a central embattled tower of Early English and Perpendicular work, with groined roof and a musical peal of 6 bells: the chancel is Early English of the twelfth century, and is lighted by widely-splayed lancets arranged in triplets at the east end and on both sides; and contains a piscina of the same date, and on the north side a small but beautiful altar-tomb of the fourteenth century beneath a rich canopy, still retaining traces of colour, and bearing a number of mutilated shields of arms; this tomb is supposed, with great probability, to be that of Isabel, daughter and heiress of Richard de Camville; westward of this, under an obtuse arch in the wall, is the monument of Maud, daughter of John Lord Grey of Rotherfield, and wife of Sir Thomas de Harcourt, 1394; the tomb bears her effigy, habited in heraldic surcoat, mantle and reticulated headdress, and on the front are four shields of arms; the chancel is divided from the nave by a wooden rood screen of thirteenth century work and of the same age as the chancel arch, with the stone-work of which its mouldings exactly correspond, and is especially noticeable as the oldest rood screen as yet known in this country: the original door to the tower staircase remains inside; the external door, now in use, was made in 1789: the north transept retains a piscina, the platforms of two altars, and four heads as brackets, and the doorway has a stoup; the nave is Norman with two original north and south doorways, the former having a stoup and four small Norman windows: on the south side of the chancel is a chapel of rich but late Perpendicular work, belonging to the Harcourt's, erected in the time of Henry VII. and filled with monuments of the Harcourt family from period down to the present time; these include a bust of George Granville Harcourt; a tomb with effigy to George Simon, second Earl Harcourt, who died in 1809; a monument of marble and alabaster under the east window to Sir Philip Harcourt, 1688, and Anne (Waller), his wife; a tomb on the south side, with his effigy in plate armour with the mantle of the Order of the Garter to Sir Robert Harcourt K.G. who was killed by the Staffords of the Lancastrian party in 1471; and to Margaret (Byron), his wife, with her effigy in surcoat, mantle, and veiled headdress, and wearing the garter; opposite this tomb is that of the second Sir Robert, his grandson, who was standard bearer to Henry VII. at the battle of Bosworth, Aug. 22, 1485. The chapel also contains mural monuments to Simon, first Viscount Harcourt, lord keeper 1710, and lord chancellor 1713-14; and to Simon, his only son, who died at Paris in 1720, with an inscription by Dr. Friend, and below it the well-known lines of Pope, and a lamb, with recumbent effigy to the Hon. and Most Rev. Edward V. Vernon Harcourt D.D. archbishop of York, 1808-48; Simon, first Earl Harcourt who died in 1777, is also buried here: in the north transept is a small round marble, with the arms of Harcourt impaling Beke, and believed to commemorate Sir John Harcourt, 1330; in the south transept is an altar tomb, with shields of arms, to Sir Simon Harcourt kt. 1547; and a statue of William, third Earl Harcourt, and Field Marshal, 1830; the chancel has also a mural monument of the Huntingdon family, 1693: the font is a tall octagon, panelled, of Perpendicular date, and was restored in 1833, the original ornaments being then placed on a tablet under the west window; there are brasses in the chapel, with effigies to Thomas Harcourt esq. 1460, and Nicholas Atherton esq. 1454; and below these small figures of children, George, Alys & Isabel Harcourt: in the chancel is a large brass, with effigy, vested, to Sir Henry Dodschone, vicar 1519; and another to Elen, wife of John Camby, 1516, with two children: a shield of the date 1293, is said to have been lately lost. The register dates from the year 1568. The living is a vicarage, yearly value £300 with residence and 20 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1845 by the Rev. William Percival Walsh M.A. of St. John's College, Oxford. Charities for distribution in bread and money amount to about £23 yearly. The remains of the ancient manor house of the Harcourts, erected, it is believed, about the time of Edward IV. and now occupied as a farm-house, are situated immediately westward of the church; these consist of an embattled tower 54 feet 6 inches in height, with a stair turret at the south-west angle, rising 2 feet 9 inches above it, and some adjoining buildings, a singular detached kitchen, and a gate-house; the basement of the tower is in part occupied by the domestic chapel, the east end of which is about 16 feet high and 12 square, and has a groined roof, and a large window of three lights, with Perpendicular tracery; the arch between the sacrarium and the outer chapel, or nave, is of the same date; this portion of the building is 17 feet 3 inches long, by about 15 feet wide, and is 11 feet 8 inches high, with a flat wooden ceiling; the interior is panelled all round; over the chapel are three chambers, one above the other, each 13 feet square, and the uppermost chamber retains the name of "Pope's Study," having been occupied by the poet during his residence there in 1716-18; the pane of red stained glass upon which he wrote the following inscription having been taken out of its casement in this chamber, is preserved as a valuable relique at Nuneham Courtney: "In the year 1718 Alexander Pope finished here the fith volume of Homer." The kitchen is an embattled structure about 30 feet square, with a turret at one angle and an octagonal pointed roof, terminating in a stone finial, with a griffin sejant, supporting a vane. About half a mile south-west are three large monumental sandstones known by the name of "Devil's Coits," conjectured by Warton to commemorate an engagement fought near Bampton in the year 614 between the British and Saxons, when the Saxon princes, Cynegil and Cwichelm, slew more than two thousand Britons; the adjacent barrow has been destroyed. E. W. Harcourt esq. M.P. who is lord of the manor, which has been held by the Harcourt family for 700 years, the Rev. W. P. Walsh, Mr. George Arnatt, All Souls College, Oxford, Oxford University and Robert Walter's trustees, are the principal landowners. The soil is gravel; subsoil, rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats, turnips &c. The area is 3,554 acres; rateable value, £4,696; the population in 1881 was 541.

SUTTON and WEST END are hamlets beautifully surrounded by woodland. The first is half a mile north; the second one mile south.

STANTON ST. JOHN in Domesday "Stantone" is a parish in the hundred of Bullingdon, union of Headington, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Islip, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 2½ miles north from Wheatley station on the Great Western Railway and 4½ east-north-east from Oxford. The church of St. John the Baptist is a fine and valuable specimen of the transition from the Early English to the Decorated styles, and belongs, probably, to the reign of Edward I.; it consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles and an embattled western tower with a turret at the south-west angle, and containing a clock and 5 bells; the most striking feature in this church is the chancel, an Early work of singular design and great beauty, the east window, in particular, is almost unique in the peculiarity of its tracery, consisting of straight lines crossing each other at an acute angle, and forming divisions lozenge shaped, very beautifully feathered: in one of the elegant side windows is some geometrical stained glass, with the arms of Clare, two others are partially stained, and in the south window there remains a fragment representing two persons carrying a shrine, with angels and other figures, and above are canopies of Decorated character; on the north side is an ogee double-feathered and crocketed arch, flanked by pinnacles, and probably an Easter sepulchre, and on the south side a plain piscina; the chancel arch is Transition Norman: the nave is divided from the aisles by three arches on either side, the north arcade being Transition Norman, and the south Decorated; the clerestory windows, consisting simply of the cusped head of a pointed arch, are unusually placed, being over the piers rather than the arches; the open benches in the nave have singular finials of human and other heads, addorsed; the north aisle is Perpendicular and wider than the south aisle, which is both small and low; the former retains some fine open screen work, an early Decorated piscina, a locker and a water drain; the font is a plain octagon, standing immediately on the ground, without base; the north aisle is said to have been built in the fifteenth century for the inhabitants of Woodperry, after their church and village had been devastated by fire; the south aisle also has its piscina and some wood work: the tower is Perpendicular and contains in its west window the figure of a man with sword and shield, in the costume of Edward I: the old rectory house, a good example of the Domestic architecture of the fourteenth century, was removed about 1840: the church has 250 sittings, all of which are free. The register dates from the year 1663. The living is a rectory, yearly value £410 with residence, in the gift of the Warden and fellows of New College, Oxford, and held by the Rev. William Edmund Craufurd Austin-Gourlay of that college. Lady Elizabeth Holford, in 1717, gave £500 in support of a Charity school for the children of this parish and that of Forest Hill; this bequest, having accumulated to £2,000, £400 was in 1874 applied to the rebuilding of the schools and the remainder produces an annual dividend of about £50, which is applied in providing for the instruction of 100 children. Woodperry is a handsome stone built mansion, three quarters of a mile from the village, the residence of John Thomson esq. J.P. The Warden and fellows of New College, Oxford, are lords of the manor and principal landowners. The manor was purchased by the College immediately after the Dissolution and valued at £22 4s. 2d. Wheatland's charity of £21 yearly is for bread. The soil is clay and loam; subsoil, sand and clay. The chief crops are grass, beans and wheat. The area is 3,290 acres; rateable value, £3,466; the population in 1881 was 548.

STOKE ROW is a liberty in the civil parish of Ipsden, and was with portions of Newnham-Murren and Mongewell formed into an ecclesiastical parish in 1849; it is 6 miles west-by-north from Henley and 6 south-east from Wallingford, in the hundred of Langtree, union of Henley, county court district of Wallingford, rural deanery of Henley, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. John the Evangelist is a stone edifice and consists of nave and a tower on the north side, containing 1 bell. The register dates from the year 1846. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £100 with house, in the gift of St. John's College, Cambridge, and held since 1850 by the Rev. James Arrowsmith M.A. of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford. There is a Congregational chapel, seating 150 persons, with a schoolroom attached. A well, completed and dedicated March 10th, 1863, was presented to the inhabitants of Stoke Row by the Maharajah of Benares, who defrayed the whole cost, amounting to £672; it is 378 feet deep and it is furnished with simple and durable machinery for drawing up water with ease and safety: the superstructure is Oriental in its design, and includes the name, title and armorial bearings of the donor, with other decorations; the dome of the well has on the upper part of it a circle of oval plate glass lenses to admit of light descending to the bottom; on the top of the machinery and under the dome, is placed the figure of an elephant. Joshua and John Fielden esqs. are the lords of the manor; the principal landowners are the lords of the manor, W. B. Reade esq. and General Price. The soil is chalk, clay and gravel; subsoil, chalky. The crops are chiefly wheat and barley. The area is 1,996 acres; rateable value, £2,401 18s. 6d.; the population in 1881 was 520.

SOUTH STOKE is a parish, 2 miles north from Goring station, on the Great Western railway, 11 north-west from Reading, 11 west from Henley, 4 south-east from Wallingford, in the hundred of Dorchester, union and county court district of Wallingford, rural deanery of Henley and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The river Thames separates the parish from Berkshire and is here crossed by the Great Western railway. The nearest bridge up the river is at Wallingford, 3¾ miles, and down, at Streatley, 2¼ miles. The church of St. Andrew is a structure chiefly of the late Decorated period, consisting of chancel, nave, aisles and an embattled western tower: the chancel is separated from the nave by a fine pointed arch and from the aisles by arcades of six pointed arches; attached to the pulpit is an hour glass stand: it was restored by the present vicar in 1856. The register dates from the year 1557. The living is a vicarage, with the chapelry of Woodcote, joint gross yearly value £380 with residence and 70 acres of glebe, in the gift of Christ Church, Oxford, and held since 1844 by the Rev. Philip Henry Nind M.A. late student of that house and surrogate. Dr. Griffith Higgs, chaplain to Charles I. and dean of Lichfield, who was born here in 1589, bequeathed in 1659 £100 to buy land for the poor and £600 to buy land for the maintenance of a Free school for ever; the rent of one acre of land, purchased by the former and amounting to £5 yearly, is distributed in money. Three children from this parish are eligible for the school at Goring Heath, where they are educated, clothed and apprenticed. A Charity of £1 yearly, left in 1602 by Augustine Knapp, has been commuted and is at present in the hands of the Charity Commissioners. In 1675 Henry Parslow left the sum of £5 yearly to be given away in great coats, and 1s. each to three poor men, one of South Stoke and two of Woodcote, and 10s. for a sermon to be preached on the Monday before All Saints. Mr. William Claxson, of Reading, left in 1859 a sum of £300 in the £3 per cents. for the distribution of warm clothing to the poor of Woodcote only, at Christmas. The Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, are lords of the manor and principal landowners. The soil is chalk and gravel; subsoil, chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. The population in 1881, including Woodcote liberty, was 838; rateable value, £7,237; the area is 3,440 acres.

Woodcote is an irregular village and liberty and parochial chapelry on the Chiltern Hills, in the parish of South Stoke 3 miles south-east and 3½ north-east from Goring station, on the Great Western railway. The church of St. Leonard, rebuilt in the Norman style, in 1845-6, by the Rev. P. H. Nind, consists of apsidal chancel, nave and south porch; the apse, with its three Norman windows, was rebuilt in fac-simile on the old foundations. The register is included in those of South Stoke and Ipsden. The living is a chapelry, annexed to South Stoke, joint net yearly value £380, in the gift of Christ Church, Oxford, and held since 1844 by the Rev. Philip Henry Nind M.A. late student of that house. The principal landowners are the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, who are lords of the manor, the trustees of Thomas Fraser Duff esq. and Mrs. Haines. The population is returned with South Stoke.

STOKENCHURCH is a large village and parish 2½ miles south-east from Aston Rowant station, on the Watlington and Princes Risborough railway, 7 north-west from Wycombe, 6 east from Watlington, in the hundred of Lewknor, union and county court district of Wycombe, rural deanery of Aston, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, on the Bucks border. From its position on the lofty ridge of the Chiltern hills, it enjoys a bracing and healthy atmosphere, and commands extensive and beautiful views of the surrounding country. The church of SS. Peter and Paul is an ancient structure of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, nave, aisles, chapel, porch and a low tower at the west end containing 3 bells: the chancel, restored about 1850, is Decorated, and retains a piscina and two brackets: the chancel arch is Transition Norman and has a hagioscope on the north side: the chapel has a good wooden roof, but its windows are of a debased character: the south doorway is Early English, the font Perpendicular: there are brasses to Robert Morle, 1410, in armour, with inscription in Norman French; and to Robert Morley, 1412, similar to preceding. The register proper dates from about the year 1707; entries previous to that date having been made in the registers of Aston Rowant. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £201 with residence, in the gift of the Lord Chancellor, and held since 1876 by the Rev. Josiah Mander. Here is a Congregational chapel built in 1820; with attached Sunday school, also Primitive Methodist chapels; one here and one at Beacon's Bottom. The charities for distribution in bread and clothing amount to £29 a year; Tipping's charity of £12 13s. yearly is for apprenticing, and £1 a year is provided for sermons. A considerable trade is carried on in chair making. Wormsley, the seat of Major John Augustus Fane J.P. is situated about two miles south-west from the village in a retired valley, among the Chiltern hills; the mansion is surrounded by masses of beech woods, and the scenery around is very picturesque. Mallard's Court, the seat of the Rev. Henry Tuffnell Young J.P. is situated in extensive pleasure grounds about half a mile from the village. Arthur H. C. Browne esq. of Kingston Blount, is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are the trustees of the late Rev. Sir Edward Repps Jodrell bart. Major Fane, T. Taylor esq. and the Rev. H. T. Young, with some smaller proprietors. The soil is sand and chalk; subsoil chalk. The chief crops are wheat, oats and barley. The area is 4,308 acres; rateable value, £4,850; the population in 1881 was 1,640.

Beacon's (or Bacon's) Bottom and Water End are hamlets in the parish of Stokenchurch, 1½ miles south-east, on the borders of Bucks.

STONESFIELD is a village and parish within the parliamentary borough of Woodstock, 4 miles west from Woodstock and 3 north-west from the Handborough station on the Oxford and Worcester railway, in the hundred of Wootton, Woodstock union and county court district, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The river Evenlode flows on the south. The church of St. James is a small edifice in the Early English and later styles, consisting of chancel with north chapel, nave, aisles, south porch, and a western embattled tower of Early English date, containing 6 bells: the chancel is Decorated with an Early English chancel arch and a small piscina: the nave and aisle are divided by two arches and the aisle retains a small piscina: the north aisle is modern: there is an Elizabethan pulpit and some screen work: Francis Edward Robinson esq. of Oxford, restored the chancel and presented the organ: the church was generally restored in 1876. The register dates from the year 1571. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £160 with residence and 140 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Duke of Marlborough and held since 1834 by the Rev. Francis Robinson M.A. of Corpus Christi College, Oxford and surrogate. There is a Primitive Methodist chapel here and a Wesleyan chapel erected in 1867, the old chapel being now used as a Temperance Hall. Castle's charity, of £1 yearly, is distributed in bread. The church land, of about 6 acres together with 4 houses, produces about £23 yearly for the repair of the church. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the slate pits, of which there are several in the parish, with extensive underground works. In 1711-12, a Roman tessellated pavement, 35 by 20 feet, was discovered in a field called "Chest-hill-acre, about half a furlong from the old Roman Akeman street and in 1779, foundations of various chambers, with their areas, were also uncovered near the same spot, but the whole, for want of protection, was gradually destroyed. The Duke of Marlborough is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, rock. The land is chiefly arable; chief crops wheat and barley, with nearly 300 acres of woodland. The area is 944 acres; rateable value, £1,399; the population in 1881 was 586.

STRATTON AUDLEY is a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 3 miles north-east from Bicester and a little to the right of the turnpike road to Buckingham, from which it is distant 7 miles south-west. The name of the village is derived from its position on the Roman road or "street" leading from Alchester to Lactodorum and from its possession by the Audleys, who held it from the time of Henry III. The church of SS. Mary and Edburga is a building of mixed styles and consists of chancel with aisles, nave, aisles, north and south porches and a tower of Perpendicular date containing 6 bells and a clock: the chancel retains a piscina: the piers and arches of the arcades and four windows are Early Decorated but most of the windows have been inserted in the Late Perpendicular period; three arches on each side, springing from clustered pillars, separate the nave and aisles: the font is octagonal: there is a bell-cot at the east end of the nave roof, but the bell has been removed: at the east end of the south aisle is a monument of white marble to Sir John Borlase who died in 1688; it has an effigy of the deceased, clad in the dress of a Roman warrior, reclining on a mattress and on either side are weeping figures and the whole is surrounded by a railing; here also is a monument to Baldwin Borlase esq. brother of the preceding, 1678; and a tablet to Diana, daughter of Sir John Borlase Warren K.B. 1802; and another inscribed slab to Elizabeth, daughter of George Parker, of Southcote, Linc. 1765: in the nave are memorials to the Woodward family, 1660-1727; and to Anne, wife of Thomas Eyles, 1763. The foot of a stone cross remains in the churchyard. The register dates from the year 1696. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £136 with residence, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford and held since 1857 by the Rev. John Edward Tweed M.A. formerly chaplain of Christ Church. Traces of a Roman road and the site of a camp are visible in the parish. Here are the kennels of the celebrated Bicester Hunt. Near the church, in a southern direction, are the remains of the foundation of an old castle, supposed to have been the residence of the first Lord Audeley: the angles of the foundation were excavated about 1870 under the direction of George Glen esq. Stratton Audley Hall is the residence of Lord Chesham. George Glen esq. J.P. the lord of the manor resides in a handsome mansion in Stratton Audley Park, built of local stone with Bath stone facings, in 1860, in a commanding position. The only other landed proprietors are the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, as owners of the rectorial glebe. The soil is loam and stone brash; subsoil, stone brash, the land is chiefly in pasture. The area is 1,981A. 2R. 4P.; rateable value £3,013; the population in 1881 was 311.

SWALCLIFFE is a village and parish, 5½ miles south-west from Banbury and about 23 north-west from Oxford, in the hundred, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of SS. Peter and Paul is a large and commodious structure of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, embattled western tower containing 6 bells and sanctus bell in a turret: the chancel is Early Decorated with three elegant sedilia and a piscina under an arcade: the rood-loft door remains and a screen of Perpendicular date, with traces of painting and gilding: in the chancel are stones inscribed to William Loggin, gent., 1635; Sarah, wife of John Loggin, 1767; John Loggin, 1677 and John Loggin A.M. fellow of New College, Oxon and rector of Marston Sicca, Glos. 1731; William Mayo, vicar, 1734 and Maria, his wife, 1717; Rev. John Caswall, 46 years vicar, 1808 and Elizabeth, his wife, 1772 and two children, 1761-6; there is also a brass to Thomas Merriott, vicar, 1662: the pulpit and reading desk were given by Anne, widow of William Wykeham esq. in 1639 and there are some pews with the date 1637: the nave is of four bays, the north arcade being composed of three Norman arches and one wider arch of Early English character: the south arcade is Transition Norman: the south aisle dates from about 1280 and contains two recessed arches in the wall, on clustered shafts: a monument in a late Classic style to John Hawten, gent. of the Lee, 1598; a table tomb with shields of arms below a mural monument of marble in the Tudor Classic style, with coloured demi figures and arms, to John Duncumb esq. and Elizabeth, his wife; and other memorials to Richard Tredwell, gent. 1759 and Ann, his wife, 1783; and to Thomas Chamberlayne esq. 1639: this aisle retains its original benches and on the floor is a brass to Joyce, wife of Richard Newman of Epwell, gent. 1584: the north aisle, dating from about 1320, contains a fine mural monument of marble, with columns and an entablature and a semi-circular recess enclosing kneeling figures of a man and his wife, with many shields of arms and is inscribed to Richard Wykeham esq. and Mary, his wife, 1635; with other memorials of that family, 1635-1703; there are brasses on the floor to Humphrey Wykeham, 1650 and to Joan, wife of Peter Harris, 1635 and mural tablets to the family of Walford, 1807-41: a few old benches remain: in the nave, above the arcades are two apparently Saxon windows, deeply splayed and now opening into the aisles and mural monuments of the Wykehams, 1751-98: the south porch is elegant Early English: handsome rood-loft screen and timber roof throughout: all the windows, some of which are memorials, are of modern stained glass: the church has been thoroughly repaired by subscriptions from the landlords and residents, especially H. Norris esq. D.L. of Swalcliffe Park, and New College, Oxford and by a local rate. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1558; marriages, 1567. The living is a vicarage, united with Epwell and Shutford, joint gross yearly value £320 with residence and 178 acres of glebe, in the gift of New College, Oxford and held since 1837 by the Rev. Edward Payne M.A. late fellow of that college and hon. canon of Christ Church. J. Loggins' charity give £6 yearly to this parish, distributed in bread. The parish contains the remains of the old British camp of Madmarston, which is situated on a conical hill with a flat top to the north of the village, the camp, which is pentagonal in shape, covers an area of more than 5 acres. Swalcliffe park, now the residence of H. Norris esq. D.L., J.P. is the property of A. W. Wykeham Mnsgrave esq. who is lord of the manor and with the Ven. Lord Saye and Sele, New College, Oxford and L. W. Lampet esq. principal landowner. The soil is light red sand and brash; subsoil, rock and sandstone. The crops are general. The area of the parish is 1,640A. 2R. 8P.; rateable value £2,678; the population in 1881 was 358.

SWINBROOK is a village and parish 2 miles east from Burford and 6½ from Witney, on the banks of the river Windrush, in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Mary, originally Norman, consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, south porch and a singular western embattled tower, containing 3 bells: the east window of five lights is a modern work in the Perpendicular style: on the south side are some fine old carved oak stalls, with misereres, formerly belonging to Burford church and opposite are two mural monuments in marble of rich and singular design, each with three shelves, on which recline male effigies of members of the Fettiplace family, variously dated from 1504 to 1686: on the floor are fine brasses with effigies to Anthony Fetyplace esq. 1510, in tabard, and John Croston esq. with three wives and four children, c. 1470; and simple inscribed brasses to Alys Feteplas, 1530; Symond Feteplas, c. 1530, and Alexander Feteplace, 1616: for the repair of the Fetteplace monuments there is a yearly bequest of £2 10s.: the arcade of the north aisle has Norman piers with pointed arches and curious Early Decorated windows: the south aisle and porch are Early English: the tower, erected in 1824, has a singular arched opening in its western exterior, within which is a door and window. Hugh Curwen, who exchanged the Archbishopric of Dublin for the Bishopric of Oxford, in 1567, died at Swinbrook in 1568 and was buried in this church. The register dates from the year 1662. The living is a vicarage annexed to the rectory of Widford, joint gross yearly value £250, with residence and 26 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Earl of Redesdale, and held since 1867 by the Rev. Matthias Mawson Lamb M.A. of Corpus Christi college, Cambridge. The Fettiplace family founded and endowed in this place several charitable institutions, including charities of £26 13s. 4d. yearly for bread and clothing, and £118 for distribution in money, left by Sir G. Fettiplace; 2nd there is also a yearly charity of £37 for apprenticing, left by Sir C. Fettiplace. The widows' land provides 15s. per quarter for widows; the parishes of Swinbrook and Widford are also entitled to send two boys to Christ's Hospital school, London. There is a bequest of £3 a year for the parish clerk. The Earl of Redesdale is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil is limestone brash; subsoil, rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. The area is 1,125 acres; rateable value, £1,254; the population in 1881 was 168.

SWYNCOMBE is a parish 3 miles south from Watlington and 8 west-north-west from Henley, in the hundred of Ewelme, union and county court district of Henley-on-Thames, rural deanery of Aston and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The parish is situated among the hills of the Chiltern range and is surrounded by scenery of an eminently picturesque character. The church of St. Botolph is a small and ancient structure of flint work, chiefly of Norman date and consists of chancel with nave, apse, south porch and a small canopied bell-cote affixed to the front of the western gable and containing 1 bell, inscribed, "Hujus campanae nomen est Jesu speciale": the nave has four and the chancel two small stained windows: the apse is a portion of the original church and, as restored, has now assumed its former Anglo-Saxon character, with three splayed windows: below the east window is an aumbry, reconstructed during the restoration; and there is a piscina coeval with the early fabric, consisting of a square basin, rudely carved, on a mutilated pedestal: the chancel arches are also of this date; and there is a plain cup-shaped Norman font, with a restored stem, base and cover: the windows in the chancel are insertions of a later period; those of the nave all single lights of Early English character: the porch, a restoration, is Decorated: some encaustic tiles, apparently of the date of Edward III. were found in different parts of the church: on the north wall of the chancel is a memorial to W. H. Woodroffe A.M. twenty-four years rector, 1825; and on the pavement of the nave are inscribed stones to Elizabeth, wife of John Day, 1698; John Day, 1701 and Dorothy Hasborn, 1704: on the north wall of the nave are monuments to the families of Ruck and Keene, 1763-1845, and on the south wall to that of Cottrell, 1831-42: several of the windows in the chancel and nave are filled with heraldic glass, exhibiting the arms of King John, the Duke of Suffolk; John, Duke of Bedford; Mary, Queen dowager of France; Thomas Chaucer and others: the west window represents St. Martin dividing his cloak with a beggar, from a picture by Rubens; St. Botolph; and below, the martyrdom of St. Thomas à Becket: the church was thoroughly repaired and restored about 1851 by the late Rev. C. E. Ruck-Keene, of Swyncombe House, and in the course of the work several fresco paintings were discovered. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1600; marriages and burials from the year 1568. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £330 with residence, in the gift of the Lord Chancellor, and held since 1871 by the Rev. Rowland Smith M.A. of St. John's College, Oxford. A stone slab, let into the south wall of the rectory house, is inscribed, "Impensis Thomae Toovey, S.T.P. Rect. de Swincomb. Com. Oxon. A.D. 1734." Swyncombe House, the seat of Col. Edmund Ruck-Keene J.P. is a mansion of red brick, in the Elizabethan style, and is situated in a valley among the Chiltern Hills and is surrounded by very attractive gardens and pleasure grounds and a park of 110 acres. There are masses of woods in the vicinity. Col. Edmund Ruck-Keene J.P. who is lord of the manor and Thomas Taylor esq. are the principal landowners. The soil is clay and chalk: subsoil, chalk. The chief crops are wheat, oats and barley. The area is 2,646 acres; rateable value, £2,244; the population in 1881 was 364.

TACKLEY is a parish and village within the parliamentary borough of Woodstock, on the river Cherwell, in the hundred of Wootton, Woodstock union and county court district, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 3½ miles north-east from Woodstock and 9 north from Oxford. The nearest station is Kirtlington, 2 miles south-east on the Great Western railway. The church of St. Nicholas is a cruciform building of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, transepts, south aisle and a central embattled tower containing 5 bells: a good Early English triplet of lancet windows, with slender shafts, occupies the whole east end of the chancel, which has a low pitched modern roof, but the corbels of the former Perpendicular roof remain: the south side has windows of this date, prolonged downwards to form recessed benches and there is a good trefoiled piscina, with drain on an octagonal corbel; on the north side is a recessed Early English arch, enclosing a Perpendicular altar tomb, panelled, with buttresses and incised on the slab with a cross fleury; alongside is a doorway, connected with the arch by a single shaft of Purbeck marble: the north aisle of the nave has been destroyed, but two arches of the Norman arcade are built up in the existing north wall and a small Norman door has been rebuilt in the western arch; the south arcade consists of three Early English arches; the clerestory and roof are plain and late: the tower is supported on arches and semi-octagonal piers of Early English character, but the upper portion is Perpendicular: in the north transept is a small piscina and a large pew with carving of Jacobean work and the date 1613; both transepts are Perpendicular: the church contains a handsome monument of white marble, with a full-sized figure of Justice, to the Hon. John Morton, Chief Justice of Chester, who died in 1780: the whole structure was restored in 1863 under the superintendence of the late G. E. Street R.A. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1568 and marriages from 1559. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value from tithe rent charge £750, with 60 acres of glebe land and residence, in the gift of St. John's College, Oxford, and held since 1839 by the Rev. Lancelot Arthur Sharpe B.D. formerly fellow and tutor of that college and surrogate. The Wesleyans have a small chapel here. Morrice's charity of £4 2s. yearly is the interest of £137 Consols, bequeathed in 1828 and is for fuel. Tackley Park is the seat of Mrs. Evetts. There are two manors: Tackley belongs to Sir Henry William Dashwood bart.; Whitehill, to Corpus Christi College, Oxford. Sir Henry William Dashwood bart. the Duke of Marlborough, the trustees of the late William Evetts, Alexander William Hall esq. D.C.L. Corpus Christi coll. St. John's Coll. Oxon and Mr. Richard Chaundy are the principal landowners. The soil is stone brash, sand, clay and gravel; subsoil, the same. The land is principally arable. The crops are barley, wheat, peas and roots. The area is 2,830 acres; rateable value, £4,785; the population in 1881 was 540.

TADMARTON is a parish and village; a portion of the latter is called LOWER TADMARTON; it is in the hundred of Bloxham, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 4½ miles west-south-west from Oxford. The church of St. Nicholas is an ancient structure of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, north aisle and western embattled tower containing 5 bells, and on the eastern gable of the nave is a small bell-turret of the fifteenth century: the chancel has two Norman arches built into the north wall, which supports a mural monument to Mary, wife of the Rev. Cresswell Whatley, rector, 1657: the east window is late Decorated and there is one small Norman window on the south side: chancel arch, Early English: the nave arcade consists of three Norman arches, on circular columns with cushioned caps: the clerestory is a Perpendicular addition: near the pulpit, on the south side is a piscina and above it a deep square recess: the nave has mural monuments to Thomas Deane M.A. rector of Whitehampton, Dorset, 1754, and others of his family 1726-74: seven of the old Decorated benches remain: the font is a very early work of this period and is an octagonal basin on a square base with scroll ornament and grotesque heads: the west tower arch, painted with a floral ornament is blocked by a gallery, erected in 1758: the east end of the aisle is partitioned off by a heavy wood and iron screen and is fitted with two high pews; it contains a blocked doorway, formerly leading to the rood loft and an aumbry, the fifteenth-century roofs are intact; the tower is of three stages, its lower portion being Late Norman or Early English and the upper portion Perpendicular. The register dates from the year 1548. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £320 with residence, in the gift of Worcester College, Oxford, and held since 1867 by the Rev. Thomas Horace Cookes M.A. of that college. There is a small charity for the poor. On Tadmarton Heath is a round British camp, of which the inner vallum, still rising five or six feet above the level of the interior, remains entire; the fosse also remains nine feet below the inner vallum and there are traces of a second vallum and indications of a third; an ancient trackway passes through the camp: a short distance north-west are two tumuli, each about 20 yards in diameter at the base; and 490 yards to the east is a copious and ever-flowing spring called the "Holy Well." Roman coins have been frequently found. John Charles MacDermott esq. who is lord of the manor and Lionel White Lampet esq. are the principal landowners. The soil is sand and brash; subsoil, limestone &c. The crops are general. The area is 1,962 acres; rateable value, £3,316 2s. 6d.; the population in 1881 was 357.

TAYNTON is a parish situated at the western extremity of the county, on the Gloucestershire border, in the hundred of Chadlington, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, one mile and three quarters north-west-by-west from Burford and 9 from Witney. The ancient church of St. John, an edifice chiefly in the Decorated style, consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles and a tall and narrow western tower containing 4 bells: the chancel, added in 1843, is modern Early English; the east end is filled with a triple lancet window and there is on the north side a vestry and in the south wall a piscina: arcades of two arches each divide the have and aisles, and in the north aisle there is a good niche with ball flower mouldings: there are remains of a hagioscope in the south aisle, which has also a richly moulded Perpendicular doorway: the font is supported by quaintly carved figures attached to a panelled shaft and the upper portion is divided octagonally by kneeling figures, each division containing a grotesque bird or animal: the tower and north side of the church are embattled: in the north aisle are mural tablets to the Sumner family, from 1618 to 1624. The register dates from the year 1538. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £70 with residence, in the gift of the Dowager Lady Dynevor and held since 1873 by the Rev. William Patrick Lennard Hand B.A. of Trinity College, Dublin, who is also vicar of Great Barrington, Gloucestershire. The charities for distribution in clothing, bread and money amount to £19 yearly: there is also a yearly sum of £5 from the Fifield estate, for educational purposes and 10s. for church repairs. In this parish are quarries of very excellent stone of the Great Oolite series, of which many buildings in Oxford have been constructed. Edward Rhys Wingfield esq. J.P., D.L. (lord of the manor), the Crown, Mrs. Price and the trustees of the late Mr. William Mace are the principal landowners. The soil is limestone brash; subsoil, rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. The area is 2,272 acres; rateable value, £2,093; the population in 1881 was 323.

TETSWORTH is a parish and village, 13 miles from Wycombe, 12 south-east from Oxford and 4 south from Thame, in the hundred, union and county court district of Thame, rural deanery of Aston and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The village is pleasantly and picturesquely situated, partly on a rising ground and partly in a valley, on the high road from London to Oxford. The church of St. Giles is a small and plain edifice of mixed styles, the earliest portions being Norman and was rebuilt in 1855 upon the site of the old church: it consists of chancel, nave, south aisle and a tower at the south-west angle surmounted by an octagonal spire and containing 6 bells: the south doorway, a Norman work, exhibits some singular sculptures. The register dates from the year 1604. The living is a vicarage, the tithes are commuted at £122 a year, with residence and 1½ acres of glebe, net yearly value £150, in the gift of the trustees of the late Dr. Slater and held since 1878 by the Rev. John Armstrong Coghlan M.A. of Trinity College, Dublin. The Congregationalists built in 1820 a chapel here. Messrs. Cornish, who are lords of the manor, and the trustees of the late John Cozens esq. are the chief landowners. The soil is clay; subsoil, clayey. The chief crops are wheat, barley and beans, with a considerable portion of pasture land. The area is 1,172 acres; rateable value, £2,851; the population in 1871 was 501.

GREAT TEW is a parish and a very pretty village in an undulating and well wooded country, 6 miles north-east from Chipping Norton and 16½ north-west from Oxford, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Michael, an ancient structure of mixed styles, situated in a beautifully wooded enclosure, approached from the road by a fine avenue, consists of chancel, clerestoried nave of four bays, aisles and a lofty western tower of Perpendicular date, containing 8 bells of silvery tone, mostly the gift of Francis, son of Sir Anthony Keck in 1709; but the third and fifth were respectively cast in 1785 and 1842: the south doorway is Late Norman and the porch Early English: the tower opens to the nave by an elegant lofty arch; and has a west window with figures of St. Lucy and St. Michael; being a memorial to Lucy, first wife of the Rev. J. J. Campbell, late vicar, who died in 1852: in the north aisle are two altar tombs of the thirteenth century, one of which has a full length effigy of a knight in chain armour, with ailletes; being one of the only four stone effigies known in England with these additional defensive pieces and supposed to represent Robert de Vere; the other bears the recumbent effigy of a female, with veil, wimple and jacket, under a long mantle: there are brasses in the chancel with demi-effigies of a knight and lady to John and Alice Wilcotes, c. 1410, under a rich canopy, surrounded by a marginal inscription; another with effigies to William Bosby, 1513 and Agnes, his wife; and a fragment of a brass to William Reynesford esq. c. 1500. there is a modern reredos and sedilia and piscina adjoining this and an ancient piscina at the east end of each aisle. The register dates from the year 1609 and has this entry: "23rd day of September, 1643, the Rt. Hon. Sir Lucius Cary knight, Lord Viscount of Falkland and lord of the manor of Great Tew, was buried here;" his wife, Lettice, daughter of Sir Richard Morison, of Tooley Park, Leicestershire, was also interred here in Feb. 1646. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £135 with residence, in the gift of Matthew Piers Watt Boulton esq. and held since 1877 by the Rev. Thomas Mitchell B.A. of Oriel College, Oxford: the vicarage is an ancient building, the front bears date 1781; but the rest is much older and dates from 1696. The poor's stock, amounting to £1 0s. 4d. yearly, is distributed at Christmas in bread. There is also an annual sum of £3 10s. 8d. for the vicar. Several Roman remains were discovered in 1810, 1817 and 1827 on Beaconsfield farm in the parish, comprising tesselated pavement, coins &c. &c. see "Brewer's Oxfordshire." Tew Park, the seat of Matthew Piers Watt Boulton esq. the lord of the manor and sole landowner, is a handsome mansion in the Classic style, standing in a very picturesque and well-timbered park. The soil is oolite, limestone and clay; subsoil, the same. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans, peas and roots. The area is 3,140 acres; rateable value, £4,396; the population in 1881 was 479.

LITTLE TEW is a parish 5 miles north-east from Chipping Norton, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Chipping Norton, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. John the Evangelist is a singular specimen of modern Early English and consists of chancel and nave, erected in 1852, north aisle and a very small tower on the north-west, containing 6 bells; the tower has a saddle-back roof and together with the aisle, was built in 1869, its lower stage forming a porch: the nave and aisle are separated by an arcade of three arches; the stained east window was erected by the Rev. C. F. Garratt M.A. late vicar, as a memorial to his second wife, Susan E. A. Garratt; in the nave are two other stained memorial windows: the church will seat 150 persons. The register dates only from the year 1857, as, up to that date, the parish was connected with Great Tew. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value, £134 with residence and 34 acres of glebe, let for £66, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1880 by the Rev. William Collingwood Carter M.A. of Christ Church, Oxford. Here is a small Baptist chapel, built in 1871. There are three almshouses erected in memory of Ellen, his wife, by the Rev. C. F. Garratt, of The Grange and late vicar. The poor's land of 23 acres, awarded in 1794, yields about £34 yearly for fuel. Loggin's charity, of £1 yearly for bread, was bequeathed in 1635; the poor's money produces 10s. a year for the same use. A. Brassey esq. of Heythrop, who is lord of the manor, Eton College, Miss Davis, the Rev. C. F. Garratt and M. P. Watts Boulton esq. are the principal landowners. The village is built on a small patch of red rock, but the soil of the parish is stone brash and clay; subsoil, brash rock and clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats, clover and turnips. The area is 1,600 acres; rateable value, £2,148; the population in 1881 was 277.

THAME.

THAME is a market and union town, parish, head of a county court district, polling place for the county and station on the Great Western railway opened to this town in 1863, in the hundred of its own name, rural deanery of Aston and archeaconry and diocese of Oxford, near the borders of Buckinghamshire, situated on the south bank of the river Thame, which enters the county at this place; it is 45 miles from London, 13 east from Oxford, 16 north-west from Wycombe and 10 south-west from Aylesbury; the town consists principally of one broad and spacious street of considerable length, with a market place nearly in the centre, over which is the Market Hall; and is governed by a Local Board of Health of fifteen members, established here in 1872.

The church of St. Mary the Virgin is a large and handsome cruciform structure of mixed styles, but chiefly Early English and consists of spacious chancel, nave, aisles, south porch, transepts and a massive embattled central tower, surmounted by a small vane and cross: the south porch, a fine example, is groined, and over the doorway is an elegant niche, in which was formerly an image of the Virgin Mary: the chancel is Early English, with a good Decorated east window, containing the arms of Lord Weymouth, who repaired the chancel in 1707: the nave is divided from the aisles by arcades of five arches, of the Decorated period: the transepts and tower are Perpendicular: the font, enriched with foliage, is Early English: the most striking monument in the church is that to John Lord Williams of Thame, Treasurer of Augmentations and Chamberlain to King Philip, ob. 1559 and his first wife; this is a massive altar tomb of marble, standing in the centre of the chancel and surrounded with an iron railing, upon which rest the effigies of the deceased, attired in the costume of the reign of Elizabeth; their heads repose on cushions, the feet of the male figure resting upon a greyhound and those of his wife upon a unicorn; the sides of the tomb are embellished with the armorial achievements of this family: on the south side of the chancel, under a canopy of Purbeck marble, is an altar tomb, with shields of arms, and above it at the back, a kneeling effigy in brass, with inscription to Sir John Clerke, of North Weston kt. who took prisoner Louis of Orleans, Duke of Longueville, at the siege of Terouanne, in the fifteenth year of Henry VIII. August 16, 1513 and died in 1539; above this, with a shield of arms, is a mural tablet to Edward, son of Sir John and Philadelphia Clerke, 1677; and adjoining a similar monument to Philadelphia (Carr), wife of Sir John Clerke kt. and bart. 1698; there is also a large stone, with brass shield of arms and long Latin inscription to Sir John Clerke himself, 1667; and other memorials to Richard Clerke, son of the foregoing, 1658 and to Edward Clerk, 1677: the church still retains a number of other fine brasses, of which the most important are those of the Quatremayns, now on altar tombs in the south transept; these include Thomas Quatremayn and Katherine, his wife, both deceased in 1342; their son, Thomas, 1396 and his wife, Joan; and Richard Quatremayn esq. and his wife, Sibil, c. 1460, founders of Rycote chapel; there are others to Geoffrey Dormer, 1502, his wife, Margery and children; Cristofre Bridgman, 1503, wife Maud and children; Walter Pratt, 1508, wife Isabel and children; John Galey gent. 1543 and wife, Joan; Edward Harris M.A. (first) and for thirty years master of the Free Grammar School, 1597; a civilian and wife, 1500; and recorded brasses to John Benet, 1460 and a civilian of sixteenth century: on the outside of one of the lancet windows in the chancel is a carving in stone of the arms of Adrian Barwis, prebendary of Thame in 1480. The register dates from the year 1601. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £300 with residence and 210 acres of glebe, in the gift of the trustees of the late Dr. Slater and held since 1872 by the Rev. Elijah Bagott Corbett T.A.K.C.L.

The Congregational church was erected in 1872 at a cost of £1,500 and will seat 450 persons; it takes the place of an earlier chapel, built in 1827, but the congregation was established here in 1750.

There are places of worship for Baptists (established 7th April, 1825), Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists.

The Free Grammar school was founded by Lord Williams, of Thame, at his death in 1858 and was soon after erected; the first trustees of the school, by indentures dated 1 Aug. 17 Eliz. (1575) transferred their powers to the Warden and fellows of New College, Oxford, who are now represented under the new scheme by three members: the present governing body consisting altogether of 13 persons, of whom three are ex officio, three are nominated, four are representative, and three co-optative; the Rev. Dr. Sewell, warden of New College, being chairman; the school is endowed with lands and funded property producing £575 yearly, and the fee for boarders is £39 per annum. The school was re-opened after a suspension of some years, in May, 1879, and the old premises having been sold, new buildings were erected on a fresh site in the Oxford road; amongst its alumni it has numbered many distinguished scholars and eminent men, amongst whom may be mentioned Henry King, Bishop of Winchester (1641-59), Lord Chief Justice Holt, born here in 1642 and died 1709, Sir George Coke, Chief Justice of the King's Bench, Pocock, the Orientalist and George Hetherilge the celebrated Hebraist and Greek scholar, and a native of Thame, 1588, and Anthony à Wood. The town and school claim the distinction of having been the place of birth and education of the celebrated John Hampden, but the former, at least, is not authenticated, although there is a local tradition that he died here at a house till lately the Greyhound Inn, whither he was brought home mortally wounded from the engagement with the King's forces at Chalgrove Field, June 18th, 1643, and was buried at Great Hampden, Bucks. John Wilkes was also educated at this school.

The weekly market is held on Tuesday; there are good supplies of cattle and corn; for the latter it is a sample, not a pitched, market.

Annual fairs are held on Easter Tuesday, the Tuesday before Whit-Sunday, the first Tuesday in August for horses, cattle and pigs, and a statute fair on the 11th October, which is continued on the two following Tuesdays, for hiring servants. These fairs and markets were first granted at the request of the Bishop of Lincoln.

The employment of the population is purely agricultural, and the land partakes in some degree of the richness and fertility of the celebrated Vale of Aylesbury, which it adjoins on its eastern confines.

Lord Williams founded an almshouse for five poor men and one woman, being decayed tradespeople of the town, and a fund for apprenticing four poor boys; by order of the Charity Commissioners the almshouse is let as cottages, the almspeople receiving £33 6s. 8d. a year in lieu of all other rights; the present yearly income being £131; there are several other benefactions, amounting altogether to £20 yearly for apprenticing; about £26 for church purposes, £2 10s. for public uses, about £104 for distribution in kind, and 16 guineas in money.

Thame is supposed to be a place of Roman origin and held a position of some importance at the beginning of the tenth century, when Wulfhere, King of Mercia, granted a charter "in the vill called Thama," and in the year 970 Osketyl, Archbishop of York, died here. Like Aylesbury, it suffered severely from the incursions of the Danes at the commencement of the eleventh century.

At the time of the Domesday the manor and abbey of Thame were held by the Bishops of Lincoln (by whom the present church was erected) and continued in that see until the reign of Edward VI. when they were granted successively to Somerset the Protector and Sir John Williams, subsequently created Lord Williams of Thame, from whom they descended to his daughter Margery, and through her marriage to Henry, Lord Norreys, of Rycote; a further marriage transferred the possession to the family of Bertie, Earls of Abingdon, by whom it is still held. During the civil war several skirmishes took place here between the Royal and Parliamentary forces, which have been spiritedly detailed by Anthony à Wood, then a student in the town.

In the year 1829 a gold coin of the Roman emperor Honorius, of the size of half a guinea, in a most perfect state, was found in a field adjoining the town.

Thame Park, formerly the residence of the Baroness Wenman, is now a seat of Wenman Aubrey Wykeham-Musgrave esq. J.P.: the mansion is beautifully situated in a deer park of 418 acres, and near it is an ancient chapel, in which Divine service is conducted on Sunday by the rector of Emmington, who is also chaplain to Mr. Wykeham-Musgrave, at the hours of 11 and 3 alternately: among other memorials in the chapel is a mural tablet by Westmacott, erected to a former Lord Wenman, by his nephew, William Thomas Wykham esq: the mansion occupies the site of a Cistercian monastery, founded in the first place at Oddington in Otmoor and translated hither in 1138 by Alexander, Bishop of Lincoln (1123-48); it was colonised from the abbey of Waverley in Surrey, and at its suppression the society consisted of an abbott and 16 monks, with a yearly revenue of £256. Near the mansion are some remains of the monastic buildings.

Adjacent to the town is a piece of ground, eight and a half acres in extent, which is used as a recreation ground.

The principal landowners are the Earl of Abingdon, who is lord of the manor, and W. A. Wykeham-Musgrave esq.

The area is 5,310 acres; rateable value, £15,098; the population of the town and hamlets in 1881 was 3,267.

Besides the townships or hamlets distinguished as Old Thame, New Thame and Priest End, which are only continuations of the town itself, Thame has three hamlets, Moreton, North Weston and Thame Park, situated about a mile distant from it.

TUSMORE is a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situated 6 miles north-by-west from Bicester and about 9 south-east from Banbury. The church has long been destroyed. The living is a rectory, yearly value £15, in the gift of the Earl of Effingham, and held since 1853 by the Rev. Charles S. Harrison M.A. who is also rector of Hardwick and Cottisford, at which last place he resides. Tusmore House, the mansion of the Earl of Effingham, stands in the middle of a park of about 70 acres, and was erected in 1770. The Earl of Effingham is lord of the manor and sole landowner. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, stone. The chief crops are wheat, beans and oats. The area with Hardwicke is 990 acres; rateable value, £781; the population in 1881 was 27.

TYTHROP is a liberty of the parish of Kingsey, Bucks, 2½ miles east from Thame, in the hundred of Lewknor, union and county court district of Thame. Tythrop House is a handsome structure of stone, standing in a wooded park of about 120 acres: the mansion contains some spacious apartments; the walls of the entrance hall are adorned by numerous family paintings, and the staircase with beautiful carvings; it is now the seat of Philip James Digby Wykeham esq. J.P. lord of the manor and sole landowner. The soil is clay; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, beans and barley. The area is returned with Kingsey parish; the population in 1871 was 145.

Letters through Thame arrive at 8 a.m.; dispatched at 5 p.m. Thame is the nearest money order office.

WARBOROUGH is a parish, bounded on the south by the Thames, and on its north-western parts (or corner) by the Thame, in the hundred of Ewelme, union and county court district of Wallingford, rural deanery of Cuddesdon and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 3 miles north from Wallingford across the bridge over the Thames, and 7 west from Watlington. The church of St. Lawrence is an edifice in the Early English and later styles, but is poor in character, and retains but few of its ancient features: it consists of chancel, nave, a chantry on the south side, and an embattled western tower containing 6 bells; the walls of the chancel, thoroughly restored in 1881 by the rector, are Early English, but the east window, of three lights, is a Decorated insertion, and has flowing tracery, and there is a piscina, with shelf, of the same date; a small Early English door, on the south side, retains some original ironwork of the thirteenth century; there is no chancel arch, but some remains of a later Perpendicular screen; the nave walls are Decorated, with a doorway of that style, the windows being Perpendicular; the south chapel belongs to the Decorated period, and is connected with the church by a plain arch of wide span; it contains a piscina and a single sedile; the tower was rebuilt in 1666, but retains some old work: the font is a cylinder of lead, set on a pedestal of stone with Perpendicular panelling, raised on two circular steps; the leaden portion displays a small arcading round the base, enclosing figures of an archbishop with crozier, in the act of benediction; the upper portion is divided by broad upright bands with rose ornaments. The register dates from the year 1538. The living is a vicarage, with residence and 18 acres of glebe, the commuted tithe being valued at £668 yearly, in the gift of the President and scholars of Corpus Christi college, Oxford, and held since 1868 by the Rev. Frederick Chalker M.A. late fellow of that college. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. The charities are of £8 yearly value, for distribution in money. The President and fellows of St. John's College, Oxford, are lords of the manor; but the manor of Benson, in the possession of Sir Francis George Stapleton bart. of Greys Court, includes a portion of the parish. The principal landowners are the President and fellows of St. John's College, Sir F. George Stapleton, and the trustees of the late Mr. James Tubb. The soil is gault; subsoil, clay and sand. The chief crops are wheat, beans, oats, barley and mangold wurtzel. The parish comprises 1,673 acres of rich marl; rateable value, £4,465; the population in 1881 was 689.

SHILLINGFORD is a hamlet in the parish of Warborough, separated from Berkshire by the Thames, which is here crossed by a bridge of three arches.

WARDINGTON is a parish 4½ miles north-north-east from Banbury, 2 miles from Cropredy station, 28 north-east from Oxford, and 12 south-west from Daventry, in the hundred, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situated on the borders of Northamptonshire. The name Wardington, or Wardenton, is equivalent to Wardenfield, the termination "ton" having at one time this signification, as we have it in one of the older English translations of the Holy Bible, "and he sent him into the ton to feed swine." Warden seems to denote land or ground in military occupation; accordingly, certain ancient military lines are to be traced in some of the fields of this and the neighbouring parish of Chipping (Market) Warden (Northants), possibly coeval with, if not anterior to, the occupation of the country by the Romans, who had a camp in the immediate neighbourhood; the lines may be traced by a rising in the course of the hedge through which they pass. The church of St.

Mary Magdalene is an ancient but small and very plain building, mostly of the Early English and Decorated periods, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, lady-chapel, vestry, south porch, and an embattled Perpendicular western tower containing a fine peal of 6 bells and a set of chimes which play every three hours; the east window of the chancel, which is good Early Decorated work, has been filled with very fine painted glass, by E. H. Chamberlain esq. as a memorial; and there is a smaller memorial window on the north side of the chancel, which retains its piscina and a locker; the nave is of the thirteenth century, and has five small and low Early English arches on each side on round columns; the clerestory and roof are of the fifteenth century; in the south porch is a stoup; the font is octagonal, and dates from 1566. The register dates from the year 1603. There are three memoranda in one of the old registers of persons who were touched by King James II. at Banbury, in 1687, for the distemper called the King's evil; there is also this entry in an older register book: "Anno Domini 1644, 30th June, buried in ye parish church of Wardington, in ye county of Oxon, John Burrell, Cornet to Colonel Richard Neville, which Mr. Burrell was slain the day before in a smart battaile against ye rebels. Ita testor Henr: Deane Capt: Regim:" A line has been drawn through "in a smart battaile against ye rebels," and in another hand, not indicating much education, but the contrary, "against the Parliament," is substituted, so making the entry run thus:—"which Mr. Burrell was slain the day before against the Parliament." The battle here alluded to was that of Cropredy Bridge, fought on this side of the river Cherwell, in which the King himself was present; the battle issued in the surrender of Banbury to the King. The register book in which this entry of Mr. Burrell's burial is contained is thrice headed on different pages of the book "Anno regni, Elizabethe, 45." "This register book begineth in one heading, but beginneth in the other two, the firste daye of Januarye, 1603, and conteinethe the names of all such as are buryed withine the parish of Wardenton, or in the two other headings, all such as are baptised or marryedd within the churche of Wardenton." This register book contains 6 entries of baptisms during the reign of Elizabeth, between the 1st of January when the register commences, and the 24th of March, the date of the Queen's decease. The living, with Williamscote and Coton, is a vicarage, gross yearly value £250 with residence and 25 acres of glebe, let for £61, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1877 by the Rev. Dale John Welburn, of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. The old vicarage house, a mere cottage, was sold within the last 100 years, and the sum realised was laid out in obtaining some accession of ground to the vicarage house of Cropredy, of which parish Wardington was at that time a chapelry; and it was not till lately (when Wardington became a separate incumbency) that the old house was replaced by the present vicarage. There is a small Wesleyan chapel. There are various charities producing £7 yearly for educational purposes and £7 10s. for distribution in money. Richard Aubrey Cartwright esq. is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are R. A. Cartwright esq. the Rev. Thomas Chamberlain and John Edward Taylor Loveday esq. The soil is red loam; subsoil, clay and sandstone The crops are general, with a larger proportion of pasture land than arable. The population in 1881 including Wardington, Williamscote and Coton, was 623; the area 2,460A. 3R.; rateable value, £5,247.

Parish Clerk, William Bonham.

Williamscote and Coton are hamlets in the parish of Wardington, 4 miles north-east from Banbury, on the borders of Northamptonshire. Both these hamlets share in the distributed charities of Wardington; Coton only in the educational charities; and Williamscote has also a yearly sum of £1 for distribution.

WATERPERRY is a parish in the hundred of Bullingdon, union and county court district of Thame, rural deanery of Cuddesden and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situated upon the river Thame, 2 miles east-north-east from Wheatley station on the Great Western railway, and 7 east from Oxford and 6 miles west from Thame. The church of St. Mary the Virgin, seated in the grounds and close to the mansion of the Right Hon. J. W. Henley, presents, with its ivy-mantled tower, a picturesque appearance, it consists of chancel, nave, south aisle and a wooden tower containing 2 bells, one inscribed "Ave Maria Gracia plena Dominus tecum" and the other cast by E. Hemings in 1732; and is a building of various architectural styles, the chancel being Early English with narrow lancet windows, and the nave and south aisle retaining features of the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth centuries; the font consists of a Perpendicular basin, on a stem of the fourteenth century; the pulpit is of Charles II.'s time and is dated 1677; and there is a reading-desk, dated 1632: the rood turret, with staircase, remains and in the centre of the north wall is an exquisite piece of sculpture, by Sir F. Chantrey, to the memory of Mrs. Greaves, wife of George Greaves esq. daughter of the late Joseph Henley esq.; in the wall of the aisle, under a Perpendicular crocketed canopy, is the recumbent effigy of a knight, in plate armour, c. 1420, representing some member of the ancient family of Fitz-Elys; a window on the north side of the nave, the west window and others contain remnants of ancient glass; of these, one was a memorial to the Fitz-Elys family and has kneeling figures of a knight and lady, with fragments of armorial bearings and is assumed to have been erected to Robert Fitz-Elys esq. 1470; there is a second and finer obituary window, with kneeling figures of a man in armour, his wife, and the Holy Virgin, with shields of arms and an inscription in the glass to Walter Curson and Isabel, his wife, 1527; in the chancel is a large stone, with brasses to the same persons, including effigies of both and of six children, with four shields and mutilated marginal inscription, divided by sculls and cross bones; these figures are specially interesting as an example of an unusual kind of palimpsest; they originally represented other persons and dated from about 1440-50, but by various alterations and additions have been made to suit their present purpose; near this is an effigy in brass to Isabel Beaufo, the Norman French inscription of which is lost; on the south wall is a monument to Sir Francis Curson, 1610. The register dates from the year 1678. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £80 with residence, in the gift of the Right Hon. Joseph Warner Henley and held since 1876 by the Rev. Josiah Smith. Here is the seat of the Right Hon. Joseph Warner Henley P.C., D.C.L., D.L., J.P. lord of the manor and sole landowner; the mansion is a handsome building in the Grecian style and pleasantly situated in a park of about 30 acres. The soil is loamy; subsoil, gravel and clay. The chief crops are grass, wheat, barley and beans. The area is 2,500 acres, a portion of which is woodland; rateable value, £3,734; the population in 1871 was 197.

THOMLEY is a hamlet of this parish, 2 miles north from the village, partly in Buckinghamshire and contains one farm and a few cottages; rateable value £649; the population in 1871 was 28.

Parish Clerk, Henry Tebby.

WATERSTOCK is a parish and village, 1 mile north-west from Tiddington station on the Great Western railway, 5 miles west from Thame and 9 east from Oxford, in the hundred, union and county court district of Thame, rural deanery of Cuddesden and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The river Thame winds round part of the parish. The church of St. Leonard is a small structure, rebuilt in 1792: the tower and north aisle, which are of Perpendicular date, being the only portion with any pretensions to antiquity: it consists of chancel, nave, north aisle and a battlemented tower, with a singular bellcote on its eastern side, containing 4 bells, of which the first is inscribed "Sancte Niccolae" and the others are respectively dated 1615, 1664 and 1736: in the north aisle is a canopied monument with the bust of a man holding a book in one hand and the other resting on a skull, with an inscription to Sir George Croke bart. who was one of the judges in the reign of Charles I. a strenuous opposer of the Ship Money Tax, and died in 1641: some fragments of ancient glass remain, these include portions of the figure of an archbishop, probably intended for George Nevill, who held the see of York from 1464 to 1476; and mutilated figures of saints: there is a handsome reredos representing The Last Supper: the font is Early and cylindrical, but plain; the wall painting is also noteworthy; most of the windows are stained, one in the north aisle has the arms of the Ashhurst family from the time of the Conquest and this family has also thoroughly repaired the general fabric of the church. The register dates from the year 1580. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £275 with residence, in the gift of John Henry Ashhurst esq. D.L. and held since 1856 by the Rev. James Henry Ashhurst M.A. of Exeter College, Oxford, hon. canon of Christ Church, Oxford, and surrogate. Bennett's charity of £8 yearly is distributed in money; a certain number of aged men and women of this parish have a claim to nomination as inmates of the Croke almshouses at Studley. Waterstock House, the seat of John Henry Ashhurst esq. D.L., J.P. lord of the manor and principal landowner, is a substantial stone building, pleasantly situated on a gentle eminence near the centre of the village; the river Thame flows near to the house; the dining room contains a good collection of family portraits. The soil is gravel and loam; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley and beans. The area is 653 acres; rateable value, £1,455; the population in 1871 was 133.

WATLINGTON is a parish and small ancient town at the foot of the Chiltern Hills and a polling place for the county, 8½ miles south-west from Thame, 8 north-east from Wallingford and 42 from London, in the hundred of Pyrton, union of Henley, Thame county court district, rural deanery of Aston, and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situated on a small rivulet which turns several corn mills. A line of railway has been made from Watlington to Princes Risborough where it joins the Great Western system. The town is lighted with gas from works erected here. The church of St. Leonard is a plain building of mixed styles, mostly Perpendicular, thoroughly restored, in 1877, at a cost of upwards of £3,000, raised by subscription, and consisting of chancel, nave, aisles, organ chamber, south chantry, vestry and a tower containing 6 bells, dated respectively 1587, 1635, 1660, 1663 (two) and 1875: in the chancel are piscina and sedilia; a new organ has also been introduced; and there are brasses to William Frankeleyn, 1485, and his wife, Sibill, with four children; William Gibsson, 1501, and his wife, Matilda, in shrouds, inscription lost; Jeremiah, eldest son of Robert Ewstes, 1587, and John Ewstes, his brother, 158(8): the restoration of this church has recently been further proceeded with, and a new pulpit, of elaborately carved oak, has been placed in the nave, made by Chapman, from designs of Mr. Edwin Dolby. The register dates from the year 1635. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £230 with residence and 63 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Rev. Bazil Tilson Shaen Carter, of Aylesbury and held since 1882 by the Rev. Herbert Barnett M.A. of Christ Church, Oxford. There are Congregational, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist chapels; the Wesleyan chapel is on the Shirburn road and was erected in 1812. There is a Reading-room with a lending library in Couching street. The Watlington Cottage Hospital, for the benefit of the sick poor of this town and the surrounding villages, is situated in Hill road and is supported by voluntary contributions. The Police Station is a substantial brick building, at the bottom of Couching street, erected in 1860, and has a large room in which petty sessions are held. An ancient cruciform building in the centre of the town, erected by Thomas Stonor esq. in 1664, is known as the Town Hall. An old malthouse in the High street, converted in 1858 into a Lecture Hall, with committee rooms, by the Watlington Temperance Society, is also used for public meetings and other similar purposes. The charities for distribution in fuel, clothing, bread and money, amount to about £107 yearly; and there are other charities of about £102 yearly for church purposes and £9 for apprenticing. Two statute and pleasure fairs are held here on the Saturday before and the Saturday after old Michaelmas day. Watlington Park, situated among the Chiltern Hills, is the seat of John Frederic Symons-Jeune esq. J.P.; the house is surrounded by magnificent trees and commands extensive views of the picturesque scenery around. John Frederic Symons-Jeune esq. J.P. Lord Camoys and the Rev. William Hulton are lords of the manor. The principal landowners are John F. Symons-Jeune esq. J.P. Mr. T. Allnutt, Rev. W. Hulton, Thomas Taylor esq. the Earl of Macclesfield and Miss C. and Mrs. M. Hine. The soil is mixed; the subsoil is upper greensand and upper and lower chalk. The chief crops are wheat, oats, barley, beans and roots. The area is 3,440 acres; rateable value, £6,433; the population in 1881 was 1,814.

CHRISTMAS COMMON is a small village and hamlet in the parish of Watlington, situated on the Chiltern Hills; from its elevated position it is peculiarly healthy; it is 2 miles south-east from Watlington. The soil is principally chalk and clay.

Parish Clerk, William Vernon.

WENDLEBURY is a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situated on the road from Bicester to Oxford, distant from the former town 2½ miles south-west and from the latter 10 north-east. The church of St. Giles is a cruciform building, consisting of chancel, nave, transepts and a western embattled tower containing 3 bells and a sanctus bell; the ancient church, also a cruciform structure, became more or less dilapidated in 1639, when the south transept was wholly removed; the remaining portions, with the exception of the tower, being afterwards deemed incapable of repair, were taken down and the present debased edifice erected in 1761; it is, however, considerably smaller than its predecessor, the whole of the space occupied by the ancient chancel being now excluded; in the churchyard are remains of a cross. The register dates from the year 1579; there is also an alphabetical index to the register, compiled, with notes, by Mr. Welborne, and including all the entries from 1579 to 1738. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £146 with residence and 200 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, and held since 1866 by the Rev. George Downing Bowles M.A. late student of Christ Church. A charity of £4 16s. yearly, given by deed of feoffment by William Browning, rector, in 1573, is distributed in money. In this parish are the remains of the Roman station or city of Alchester, the most conspicuous trace of which consists of a slightly elevated mound, situated in a triangular meadow, bounded by a brook; it was excavated in 1776 by Mr. Penrose and found to enclose a portion of the walls of a square building, 3 feet in height, with a tessellated pavement. The Duke of Marlborough is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are Mr. R. K. Foster and Miss Takeman. The land, stiff clay with gravel in the bottom, is nearly equally divided into pasture and arable. The area is 1,096 acres; rateable value £1,365; the population in 1881 was 166.

Parish Clerk, George Dumbleton.

WESTON-ON-THE-GREEN is a parish and village 4½ miles south-west from Bicester and 9 north-east from Oxford, in the hundred of Ploughley, union and county court district of Bicester, rural deanery of Bicester and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Mary is a plain oblong structure in a modern Classic style, rebuilt in 1743 by Norreys Bertie esq. on the site of the ancient church, the whole of which, with the exception of the tower, was demolished; this is still standing at the west end of the present church and is in part Norman, with an upper stage of Decorated work and contains 5 bells; there are many memorials in the church to the families of Norreys and Bertie, 1620-1766; and others to the families of Ladyman, 1710-62; there is also a tablet to Richard Chamberlain, 1624, and Elizabeth (Harris) his wife, 1623; and a brass is recorded to Ales, wife of Zachary Saxeye, 1581, with effigies of a woman lying between two infants. The register dates from the year 1591. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £194 with residence and 4 acres of glebe, in the gift of Captain Frederick Arthur Bertie, and held since 1877 by the Rev. Henry Jones B.D. of St. David's College, Lampeter. The manor house, a large gabled building, two stories in height, situated a short distance from the church, was erected at the latter end of the sixteenth century and has been rebuilt; it is now the residence of Capt. Frederick Arthur Bertie, who is lord of the manor and principal landed proprietor. The soil is stone brash, gravel and clay; subsoil, clay and stone. The land is partly arable, partly pasture and partly wood. The area is 2,466 acres; rateable value, £2,472; and the population in 1881 was 363.

WESTWELL is a parish on the borders of Gloucestershire, 2 miles south-west from Burford, 9 west from Witney and 5 north-west from Alvescot station on the Oxford, Witney and Fairford railway, in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Mary is a small edifice, chiefly of the Transition Norman period, consisting of chancel and nave, with a Perpendicular south porch and a modern portion added to the west end in 1869, and surmounted by a curious wooden bell-turret containing 2 bells and a sanctus bell: the chancel is Early English, with a circular east window of cinque-foiled plate tracery and is filled with stained glass representing six scenes from the life of Christ; there are also three lancet windows with figures of the three Marys: in the chancel is a very fine altar tomb with a recumbent male effigy of a civilian in the costume of the Tudor period, holding a small volume between the hands; a larger one is placed under the head, and at the feet is a lion couchant: on the sides are numerous shields, but there is no inscription: the porch is Perpendicular and has a trefoil-headed stoup and a good Norman doorway; the north doorway is also Norman: an inserted Perpendicular window on the south side of the nave has some very curious ancient stained glass; and on the north side is a fine mural tablet to Charles Trinder, ob. 1657, with a recess in which are kneeling figures of himself, his wife, 6 sons and 8 daughters; surmounting the whole is an emblazoned shield: the stone pulpit is a modern work in the Decorated style; a curious sun-dial, formerly attached to the gable of the porch, is now fixed on an adjoining tombstone; the font is Norman, with a quatrefoil-shaped basin on four massive shafts, and a square base; the church will seat 98 persons. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1602; marriages and burials, 1597. The living is a rectory, net yearly value from 275 acres of glebe £148 with residence, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, and held since 1881 by the Rev. Wm. Robert Sharpe, jun. M.A. of Keble College, Oxford. The charities for distribution in clothing, fuel and money amount to £13 15s. yearly value, and are assigned by the rector and churchwardens; there is also £1 yearly for the parish clerk, awarded in 1770. The principal landowners are the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford (who also hold the manor), and Clement Pinnell esq. The soil is chiefly stone brash; subsoil, rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. The area is 1,300 acres; rateable value, £1,205; the population in 1881 was 136.

WHEATFIELD is a village and parish 4 miles north from Watlington, 1½ south from Tetsworth, and 4¼ south from Thame, in the hundred of Pyrton, union and county court district of Thame, rural deanery of Aston and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. Andrew is a very small building, rebuilt about 1750, and consisting of chancel, nave and a bell-cote containing 1 bell: the original Perpendicular chancel arch remains; there are several marble tablets to the Rudge family, and four to Lord Charles Spencer, son of the second Duke of Marlborough, and various members of his family. The register of baptisms and burials dates from the year 1722; marriages, 1721. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £254 with residence and 30 acres of glebe, let for £60, in the gift of and held since 1852 by the Rev. Charles Vere Spencer M.A. of Christ Church, Oxford. The Spencer family had formerly a mansion here of which the stables are still standing close to the church. The Rev. Charles Vere Spencer M.A., J.P. who is lord of the manor, the Earl of Macclesfield, H. B. Reynardson esq. and the Powys family are the landowners. The soil is mixed; subsoil, rag. The chief crops are wheat, beans, barley and roots. The area is 771 acres; rateable value, £1,142; the population in 1871 was 91.

WHEATLEY, formerly a chapelry in the parish of Cuddesdon, was in 1854 formed into an ecclesiastical parish; it is in the hundred of Bullingdon, union of Headington, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Cuddesdon and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 49 miles from London and 5¼ south-east from Oxford; there is a station of the Wycombe and Oxford railway in the village. A Local Board of Health of nine members has been formed here, and by its means a complete system of drainage through the length of the main street was completed in 1858, at a cost of more than £1,000. The church of St. Mary, erected in 1857 on a site above the village, consists of chancel, nave, aisles and a lofty tower with spire, completed in 1868 and containing 6 bells. The register dates from the year 1813; all records anterior to this are in the Cuddesdon registers, which date from 1541. The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £300 with residence, erected in 1850 on the glebe of 55 acres, which adjoins the Oxford road. The living is endowed with the vicarial tithes of the district of Denton in the parish of Cuddesdon, together with a farm at Charlton-on-Moor, and is in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1849 by the Rev. Edward Elton M.A. of Balliol College, Oxford. Here is a Congregational chapel built in 1841. The charities for the benefit of the poor amount to about £36 yearly, and for purposes of education to about £11; there is also a yearly sum of £5 for apprenticing. John Chillingworth esq. is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are the Bishop of Oxford, Colonel James Miller, Alexander Hall esq. the Rev. W. H. Wace, and Mrs. Gale. The soil is loam and clay; subsoil, clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley and beans. The area is 970 acres; rateable value, £3,294; the population in 1881 was 1,020.

LITTLEWORTH, ½ mile west, is partly in this parish and part in Shotover, and consists of a few cottages.

WHITCHURCH is a village and parish, partly in Berks but principally in the county of Oxford, the two portions being divided by the river Thames, over which is a light bridge of three arches, built in 1853, in place of an older structure of oak erected in 1793; it is 5½ miles north-west from Reading, 22 from Oxford, 10 south-west from Henley, 10 south-east from Wallingford, in the hundred of Langtree, union of Bradfield, county court district of Henley, rural deanery of Henley and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The village, though straggling, is beautifully situated, and is surrounded by woodland hills. The church of St. Mary, placed close to the river, was originally a Norman edifice, but has been so often renovated as to have but little early work now remaining: it consists of a chancel, nave, north aisle and a tower with spire containing 6 bells; the chancel is separated from the nave by a fine lofty arch; there is a good Norman south doorway, with zigzag and other ornaments, and carved capitals; the porch is Perpendicular: the windows, all of which are stained, are chiefly memorials: there are several tablets to the Lybbe, Powys and Gardiner families; including one to Richard Lybbe, of Hardwick, 1658, and Anne (Blagrave), his wife, 1651, with English verses; there is a brass, with effigies, to Thomas Walysh, treasurer of the Duchy of Lancaster to Henry IV. V. and VI. 1420, in armour, and to his wife, but the inscription is incomplete; another brass commemorates Roger Gery, "in decretis bacularius," vicar, with his effigy bearing the chalice and Host, c. 145-; there is a third to Peter Windsor, curate, 1610, with effigy, robed and kneeling; and an inscription to Thomas Percyvalle, rector, 1533; in the north aisle is a mural monument to Richard Lybbe, of Hardwick, 1599, and Joanna, his wife, with their effigies, painted and gilt, the former in armour, and the latter in a ruff and quaint headdress, both kneel at a desk, and above is a quartered shield with crest: the church was restored and enlarged in 1858. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1598; marriages and burials, 1597. The living is a rectory, net yearly value about £500 with residence and 9 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1880 by the Rev. John Slatter M.A. of Lincoln College, Oxford, and hon. canon of Christ Church. The several charities connected with the parish amount to about £36 yearly for the purchase of bread, fuel, great coats and red cloaks for the poor of the parish. Bozedown, a handsome modern brick building in the Elizabethan style, situated on an eminence overlooking the Thames, is the property and residence of William Fanning esq. J.P. Combe Lodge, now the property of John Foster esq. of Halifax, is a large mansion of the Ionic order, protected on the north by thickly-planted trees and commanding some fine prospects on the south. Hardwick House, now the residence of Charles Day Rose esq. belonged in the reign of Richard II. to the family of Hardwick from whom it took its name, then to the Lybbes, in which family it continued for 200 years, until 1730, when it passed, on the marriage of Isabella, heiress of Richard Lybbe esq. to Philip Powys esq. youngest son of Sir Thomas Powys, of Lilford, into the family of the present owner, Philip Lybbe Powys-Lybbe esq.; it underwent repair soon after the restoration of Charles II. in consequence of the dilapidation resulting from the civil wars; in 1839 it was again repaired and restored to its original character. Swanston House is the residence of Alexander Clark Forbes esq. J.P. The principal landowners are P. L. Powys-Lybbe esq. William Fanning esq. John Foster esq. who is also lord of the manor. The soil is chalk and gravel; subsoil, chalky. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The area is 2,070 acres, besides 300 on the Berkshire side of the Thames; rateable value, about £6,300; the population in 1871 was 836, and in 1881, 913.

WIDFORD is a parish a mile and a half east from Burford and 6 north-west from Witney, in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, on the north bank of the river Windrush. This parish was formerly in Gloucestershire, but by the Act 2 and 3 Wm. IV. cap. 64 and 7 & 8 Vict. cap. 61 it was annexed to Oxfordshire. The church of St. Oswald, now closed except for burials, by an order in Council issued in 1860, is a small and ancient building, chiefly of the Decorated period, consisting of chancel and nave with a bell gable containing a small bell, inscribed, "Come ye all at my call and serve God all:" the nave and chancel are mostly Norman: the north door is Norman and there is a good Norman font: the pulpit also is ancient and has some good panelling: the church is noteworthy as occupying the site of a Roman villa; fragments of tesselated pavement and other remains being frequently met with in the churchyard. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1751; marriages, 1770; burials, 1754. The living is a rectory with the vicarage of Swinbrook annexed, joint gross yearly value £250 with residence and 26 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Earl of Redesdale, and held since 1867 by the Rev. Matthias Mawson Lamb M.A. of Corpus Christi college, Cambridge, who resides at Swinbrook. The poor of Widford receive about £15 per annum from Sir G. Fetiplace's charity to Swinbrook. The Earl of Redesdale is lord of the manor and sole landowner. The soil is stone brash; subsoil, rock. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. The area is 564 acres; rateable value, £577; the population in 1881 was 49.

WIGGINTON is a village and parish 6½ miles south-west from Banbury and 6½ north-east from Chipping Norton, in the hundred of Bloxham, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, situated on the river Sweir or Swere. The church of St. Giles is a plain building, mostly of the Early English period, and consists of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, north porch, and an embattled Perpendicular tower; the chancel is Decorated and has a piscina, a sedile in the sill of the window, and a stone seat with crockets and finial at the south-west angle; the nave is separated from the aisles by arcades of three Early English arches on each side, and the aisle windows are very good examples of the same period; the chancel contains two recumbent effigies, one of which appears to be a crusader, in the act of unsheathing his sword; built into the exterior south wall is a singular tomb, apparently of the thirteenth century, with a figure of a man and two children, all standing erect with clasped hands: the chancel and south aisle were restored about 1870. The register dates from the year 1558. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £412 with residence, and 225 acres of glebe let for £353, in the gift of the Principal and fellows of Jesus College, Oxford, and held since 1879 by the Rev. Alfred Dean Mozley M.A. of that college. Extensive Roman remains have been found in this parish on a site about 300 yards east of the church; in 1824 a chamber of semi-octagonal form, measuring 20 feet by 14, was discovered, the pavement of which was composed of small tesseræ of four colours—white, yellow, blue and red; the walls of this chamber remained perfect to a height of about two feet above the pavement, being, at the same time, one foot below the surface of the soil; on the south-south-east side the remains of an inferior room or court were met with measuring 20 feet by 17½ feet, the pavement of which was of a coarser kind; beneath this pavement was a small skeleton; and among other relics found were an ivory or bone pin four inches in length and some small copper coins of the Emperor Constantine. The principal landowners are R. S. Bolton Davis esq. the Misses Cobb and the rector in respect of his glebe. The chief crops are wheat, barley, beans, peas and roots. The area of the parish is about 1,780 acres of rich and undulating red soil; rateable value, £1,941; and the population in 1881 was 265.

WILCOTE (or WILCOTT) is a small but pleasant parish 4½ miles north-north-east from Witney, 5½ south-west from Woodstock and 3½ from the Charlbury station on the Oxford, Worcester and Wolverhampton railway, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford; it contains only two houses besides the church. The church of St. Peter is a small stone building, chiefly in the Decorated style, consisting of chancel and nave with porch, and a turret containing 1 bell; the chancel is very wide, with low walls, and has a Decorated east window of three lights; the nave has, at the west end, two elegant windows of the same date, divided on the outside by a tall buttress, carrying the bell-cote; walled up on the south side of the nave is a Norman doorway; the font is modern; total length of church, about 45 feet; the fabric was thoroughly restored and reseated with oak in 1868. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1764; marriages, 1755; burials, 1795. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £75, in the gift of Miss Pickering, and held since 1860 by the Rev. Robert Lowbridge Baker M.A. of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, who is also vicar of and resides at Ramsden. The Manor House, the residence of Miss Pickering, lady of the manor and sole landowner, is a small building surrounded with a lawn and pleasantly situated near the church. The soil is a stout loam; subsoil, limestone. The chief crops are wheat, barley and roots. The area is 314 acres; rateable value, £343; the population in 1881 was 10.

WITNEY.

WITNEY is a township, market and union town, head of a county court district, polling place for the county and station on the Witney and East Gloucestershire branch of the Great Western railway, in the rural deanery of its name, hundred of Bampton and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 6 miles north-east from Bampton, 11 north-west-by-north from Oxford, 13½ east-north-east from Fairford and 65 from London, or 75 by the Great Western railway, and is situated on the river Windrush, over which is a stone bridge of three arches, erected in 1822. The town consists chiefly of two streets, of which the principal is upwards of a mile in length, expanding at its northern end into a large open space called Church green. The town is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates for the county, and its internal affairs are managed under the Local Government Act by a Board of nine members. There are two bailiffs and other officers, chosen at the court-leet held yearly; and a court baron is also held by the Duke of Marlborough. Witney was a royal borough and sent two members to Parliament from the 5th of Edward II. to 33rd Edward III. when the inhabitants petitioned to be released from the privilege. The East Gloucestershire railway from Oxford to Witney—a branch of the Great Western system—was completed and opened for passenger traffic November 13, 1861; since then this line has been extended to Fairford, to which place it was opened in January 1874; and power is reserved to the Company to continue it to Cheltenham, and to construct a branch line from Lechlade to Faringdon.

St. Mary's church, situated at the southern extremity of the town, and locally in the hamlet of Curbridge, is a noble, lofty and spacious cruciform edifice of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, nave with clerestory, aisles, transepts (each with a western aisle), north porch, north-east chapel and a central tower with lofty octagonal broach spire and tall octangular turrets at the angles, and on each face of the spire between these, a narrow dormer of almost equal height, with two small openings near the top; the tower, lighted on each side by three lancets, contains a musical peal of 8 bells, dating from 1660 to 1815, and a clock, bought by public subscription in 1876, at a cost of £195; attached to which is a carillon machine playing fourteen tunes, and given in 1876 as a memorial to Leonard Warrington, a native of Witney, by his widow and nephew; the chancel is lighted at the east end by three lancets, the central light being stained with a figure of our Lord as the Good Shepherd: and retains a piscina and three sedilia; the nave and aisles are Perpendicular, and the latter has, at the west end, a large window of five lights, restored about 1845 by Mr. Derrick, and since filled with stained glass by Miss Rayne; the clerestory is lighted by five three-light Perpendicular windows, and is continued round the transepts, of which the north transept belongs to the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, and appears to have been a chantry or chapel with a separate altar: in this transept is a monument to Henry Box, 1662, founder of the Free Grammar School: the south transept was also originally Early English, but heightened and extended in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries; the organ is powerful and was built by subscription in 1874; it cost £514: the church was completely restored and the chancel rebuilt in 1867, cost above £4,000: two canopied recesses in north transept contain recumbent figures; there are a number of mural tablets; a chapel at the north-west angle of the church is the burial-place of the Wenman family; in the eastern wall of the chapel is a quaint monument to members of the Wenmans; in a recess on the north side is a recumbent figure of an ecclesiastic robed and there are a number of incised slabs to the Wenmans, one of which, to "Francis, the Sonne of Francis Wenman," is dated 1655. From early Saxon times this church appears to have been connected with the See of Winchester; the bishop for many generations possessed a summer palace in the grounds eastward of the chancel: the present rector was the first presented by a Bishop of Oxford. The register dates from the year 1578. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £1,450 with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Oxford and held since 1879 by the Rev. William Foxley Norris M.A. of Trinity College, Oxford, rural dean of Witney and surrogate.

Holy Trinity church, on Wood green (locally in Hailey-cum-Crawley), a chapel of ease to the parish church, is a lofty and substantial edifice of stone in the Early English style, consisting of chancel with vestry on north side, nave with western gallery, north porch, a turret containing 1 bell, and will seat 518 persons; it was built in 1849, partly by subscription, together with a grant of £250 and £500, given by the Rev. C. Jerram, a former rector.

The Congregational chapel, on High street, was built in 1828, largely at the cost of Mr. William Townsend, of Holborn, London, who gave £1,100 towards its erection, the total cost being about £2,000; the foundation stone was laid by Miss Townsend, March 4th, in that year, and the chapel opened in the following October; the Primitive Methodist chapel is in Corn street, and was built in 1869; the Wesleyan chapel, in High street, is a building of stone in the Gothic style, erected in 1850 and subsequently enlarged; attached are large day schools: the meeting-house for the Society of Friends is a stone building on Wood green.

The Witney Burial Board was formed in 1855; the cemetery, covering an area of 3A. 1R. 25P. was purchased by the Board for £170, and opened for interment in January 1857: it has two mortuary chapels; the cost of erecting the chapels and cemetery keeper's house and laying out the grounds was £1,360.

The Grammar School was founded in 1663 by Henry Box, grocer and citizen of London and a native of Witney, by whom it was endowed with a rent-charge on certain lands in the parish of Longworth, now producing £60 yearly; in 1674 the charity was transferred by the founder's widow to the Grocers' Company, who considerably augmented the income; the foundation, originally limited to thirty boys born in the parish, was reconstituted in 1877; the school, situated a little north-west of the church and approached by a noble avenue of elms, is a building of stone with residence at either end for the head and second masters and stands upon about two acres of ground.

A Blue Coat school, originally established for the education, clothing and apprenticing of fifteen boys, ten sons of journeymen weavers of Witney and five of Hailey, was founded and endowed in 1723 under the will of John Holloway, of London, dated September 24th in that year, with 88 acres of land at Stonefield and Hailey, now producing about £140 yearly; this charity has since been extended to the sons of operatives in blanket manufactories; the foundationers are elected by the trustees, a body of five local gentlemen, and are received at the age of seven and nine years and allowed to remain till they are fourteen (and are furnished every year with two suits of clothes) when they are apprenticed with premiums of £20 each. Wright's gift to this school consists of £4,500 Consols, producing £144 yearly; there are now (1883) thirty boys on the foundation.

The Town Hall, situated in the Market place, was repaired in 1876, and is a small and ancient rectangular stone building consisting of one room, supported by nine stone columns, and is occasionally used for lectures and public purposes.

The Corn Exchange, situated in the Market place, is a building of stone, erected in 1863 by a public company, at a cost of £2,500; the basement contains, besides one large room, a market hall, used also for public meetings, rooms occupied by the Witney Athenæum, well supplied with newspapers and periodicals and by the Natural History Society; in the upper part of the building is a public hall with offices and retiring rooms, where assemblies, balls, exhibitions and public meetings are held.

The County Court house, situated in Bridge street, is a building of stone, erected in 1858; it has one large room, in which the county court is held, registrar's office, judge's retiring room, clerks' offices and waiting-rooms.

On the west side of the Green is the Police Station, a stone building, erected in 1860; it has a large room, in which the petty sessions are held, with a retiring room for magistrates and waiting rooms; on the north side of the building is a house for the superintendent and one on the south side for a sergeant.

In the Market place is the Butter Cross, a wooden structure, supported by thirteen cylindrical pillars; it has four gables at the cardinal points; at the apex of the roof is a square tower with clock; the basement of the building was used at one time on market days for the sale of butter, poultry, eggs and other commodities; it was built in 1683 by William Blake esq. of Cogges, and was renovated in 1811 and again in 1868 by subscription.

The town has been long celebrated for the manufacture of blankets, which, though no longer a monopoly, gives employment to a large portion of the population. In 1710 the blanket weavers in the town and 20 miles around it, were incorporated by Royal Charter, dated 23rd May in that year, and soon after the Blanket Hall was erected, in which the blankets were weighed, measured and marked according to the terms of the Charter, the manufacture at this time employing 150 looms and 4,000 hands. The water of the river Windrush is said to possess peculiar qualities, which contribute to the whiteness and softness of the blankets manufactured here. Other woollen goods, as well as gloves, are made here, and there are two breweries.

There is a fortnightly market for cattle and pigs, held in the Market place, and a corn market weekly on Thursdays; both are well attended.

Fairs are held on Thursday in Easter week, Thursday after July 9th, Thursday after August 24th, Thursday following the first Sunday after September 8th, Thursday before October 10th and Thursday after December 1st for cattle and cheese.

Close to the parish church are six almshouses, originally founded for six widows of decayed blanket manufacturers, but now inhabited by widows of journeymen weavers and persons who were connected with the trade; the houses, rebuilt in 1868, were erected and endowed by John Holloway, of London, who died June 3rd, 1724, with 115 acres of land, now yielding £90 yearly; the inmates have an allowance of 4s. a week. At the west end of the town six other houses were built in 1821 by William Townsend, a native of Witney and haberdasher of Holborn, London, for the use of aged unmarried women, who also receive an allowance of 4s. weekly.

Freeland's estate of 85 acres produces £92 yearly for distribution in clothing and money to the poor of the parish, and there are several other charities amounting to £120 yearly for distribution in bread and money, besides about £12 a year for church purposes.

The Duke of Marlborough is lord of the manor.

The population of Witney township in 1881 was 3,017 the area is 188 acres; rateable value, £7,393.

The areas of Crawley, Hailey and Curbridge are given separately.

Curbridge is a hamlet of Witney, one mile and a half west. The church of St. John, a chapel of ease to the parish church, is a small stone edifice, consisting of nave only and a turret containing 1 bell. The Primitive Methodists have a small chapel here. In this hamlet are the remains of what was once a fine baronial mansion, now a farm house, and known as "Caswell farm;" it is still surrounded by a large moat, and the massive crenellated piers of the great gateway are yet remaining; the last family of distinction who resided here were the Wenmans, originally clothiers in Witney; the existing house forms three sides of a quadrangle with a central block and two gabled wings, extending towards the rear. The principal landowners are the Duke of Marlborough, lord of the manor, Colonel Pearson, Messrs. James Long and John Dutton. The soil is of a mixed character; subsoil, clay and stones. The chief crops are cereals. The area is 2,951 acres; rateable value, £5,521; the population in 1881 was 604.

WOOD EATON is a parish in the hundred of Bullingdon, union of Headington, county court district of Oxford, rural deanery of Islip, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 2 miles south from Islip station, on the London and North-Western railway, 4 miles north-north-east from Oxford; the river Cherwell bounds it on the west. The church of the Holy Rood is a small building of stone, of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, nave and a Perpendicular tower, introduced within the west end of the nave and containing 6 bells; the walls of the church are Early English, but additions and insertions have been made at later periods; the chancel retains a piscina, with projecting basin, and two plain stone sedilia, one of which has a carved elbow; the south doorway is Decorated, with a modern porch; the outer wall of the tower is built upon the Early English west wall, the other three sides resting on Perpendicular arches and piers within the nave; the font is circular and plain; the pulpit has some carving and in the chancel are several oak stalls, with poppy heads; the rood screen, also remaining, is Late Perpendicular. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1564; marriages, 1695; burials, 1539. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £136 with residence, and 9 acres of glebe, in the gift of John Weyland esq. and held since 1881, by the Rev. Robert Hutchison M.A. of Exeter College, Oxford. Among the early rectors may be mentioned John Whitton, 1380, whose effigy on brass, with that of John Bloxham, 7th Warden, occur under one canopy in the chapel of Merton College. This village, situated in a picturesque and secluded spot, is an extremely interesting example of the traditional English village, now so rarely to be met with; the church, placed on a rising ground, walled about, stands out in an open space shaded with trees, and north of it is the village green, in the centre of which, beneath a fine old tree, linger the parish stocks; a few paces away stands the cross, now but a shaft raised on three steps; on the lower slope, under a spreading elm, is a large and carefully tended well of pure, clear water available at once for cattle and wayfarers; close by, on the east side, is the rectory, with its gables and massive chimneys, and on the west the manor house, while the cottages of the villagers are ranged along the ridge. In 1676 some ancient British coins were found here, and Roman urns have been discovered in the neighbourhood. John Weyland esq. is lord of the manor and principal landowner. Wood Eaton House, the seat of John Weyland esq. D.L., J.P. is a modern mansion erected on the removal of the old house in 1775, and is surrounded by a park of several acres. The soil is clay; subsoil, sand and clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley and beans. The area is 639 acres; rateable value £1,261; the population in 1881 was 67.

FOREST FARM, formerly extra-parochial, is included in this parish.

WOODSTOCK anciently "Wudestoe," the "woody place," is a parliamentary borough, corporate, market and union town, parish and head of a county court district, 3 miles north-west from the Woodstock Road railway station on the Oxford and Birmingham line, 3 from the Handborough railway station on the Oxford and Worcester line, 62 from London, 8 north-north-west from Oxford, 1 south-west from Bicester and 8 north-east from Witney; it is in the hundred of Wootton, liberty of Oxford, rural deanery of Woodstock and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford; the town was incorporated by Henry VI. by a charter dated 24th May, 1453, and this charter with those of Edward IV. in 1463 and 1467, Henry VII. Edward VI. Queen Elizabeth in 1565, and James I. was confirmed by Charles II. August 23, 1664, by virtue of which the corporation consists of a high steward, a mayor, recorder, town clerk, four aldermen and sixteen common councilmen; the high steward, recorder, mayor and aldermen act as magistrates within the borough. This town is not regulated by 5 & 6 William IV. c. 76. The river Glyme flows through the town, and the river Cherwell and the Oxford canal are 3 miles east. The borough of Woodstock has, with some intermissions, sent representatives to Parliament since A.D. 1301-2; the existing parliamentary borough comprises 12 parishes with the hamlet of Thrup and now returns one member only. The church of St. Mary Magdalene, originally Norman, is now a structure of mixed styles, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, north chapel, south and west porches and a western tower with pinnacles, containing 8 bells and clock with chimes, playing at intervals of four hours: the chancel, primarily a Decorated work, has an east window of five lights, and several others of Perpendicular date; the north side of the nave, rebuilt in a debased style in 1875, was again rebuilt in 1878, when a large gallery, erected in 1676, and occupying its whole length, was removed; the south arcade has five Early English arches on plain round pillars, with sculptured caps; the clerestory is Perpendicular; the south aisle has Early English windows and remains of a rich Norman doorway; the west porch, lighted by four windows, is Perpendicular; the tower, rebuilt in 1784, is of the same character as the south aisle, but more ornamented, and better finished; the windows once contained much heraldic glass, but they suffered greatly from the violence of the Parliamentary troops; the font dating from the time of Edward I. or II. is octagonal, with panelled tracery and ballflower ornament. On the south side of the nave is a brass, with effigy and subscription, to Richard Bailly, citizen and haberdasher of London, 1441; on the west wall are two monuments to Jerome Keyte esq. B.C.L. of St. John's College, Oxon, 1631, the first an oval of black marble, erected by his daughter Elizabeth Say, and the other a brass, with inscription in Latin; both have shields of arms: in the chancel is a monument to James King D.D. of Shellands, Yorkshire, dean of Raphoe, 1795, and Anne his wife 1794, with their son James King, Capt. R.N., LL.D., F.R.S. 1784: in 1878 the church was thoroughly restored, at a cost of £6,643. The register dates from the year 1631. The living is a chapelry annexed to the rectory of Bladon, joint gross yearly value £407 with residence and 170 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Duke of Marlborough and held since 1876 by the Rev. Arthur Majendie T.A.K.C.L. domestic chaplain to the Duke of Marlborough, and surrogate. The Wesleyan Methodists, United Free Methodists, and Baptists (built in 1827), have each a place of worship here. The Cemetery, three acres in extent, in the parish of Bladon, adjoins the workhouse grounds, the chapel of which is used for the funeral services. Almshouses were erected at Hensington, parish of Bladon by indenture, dated June 5th, 1798, by Caroline, Duchess of Marlborough, for six poor women, widows or maidens, and endowed with £3,500 Consolidated Bank Annuities, producing £105 yearly. Various bequests have been left at different times for the poor, these provide about £30 a year to be distributed in bread and clothing and £24 in money, besides £9 for general charitable objects. The Town Hall, erected by the Duke of Marlborough in 1766, is a stone building, from designs by Sir William Chambers, and consists of a basement used by the Woodstock fire brigade, and two upper rooms for magisterial business. The County Police Station and Lock-up, is a substantial building of stone, with a dwelling house for an inspector and one married and two single constables, and was erected, in 1863, near the National Schools; the force consists of an inspector and seven men. The leather glove trade has been carried on in Woodstock from a very remote period. Queen Elizabeth, in one of her "progresses," received gloves from the Woodstock glovers and the University of Oxford presented James I. in 1616, "with very rich gloves," made in Woodstock; the trade has now very much decayed, but still gives employment to a considerable number of men, women and girls. Tuesday is market day; cattle and cheese fairs, formerly well attended, have ceased to be held; but there is a statute fair on the first Tuesday in October. The Rev. John Case M.A., M.D. fellow of St. John's College, Oxford, and a noted controversialist and philosopher, was born here about 1540; John Bennet, the shoemaker poet, and parish clerk, was also a native of the place, 1774. Woodstock House is the seat of Colonel Henry John Thomas R.A., J.P. The Duke of Marlborough is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The area is 470 acres; rateable value, £2,837; the population of the parish in 1881 was 1,133. The population of the parliamentary borough was in 1881:—

OLD WOODSTOCK is in the parish of Wootton, but forms part of the town of Woodstock, with which it is connected by a bridge over the Glyme, formerly called the Enis, it has now, by Order in Council, been separated from Wootton for ecclesiastical purposes and annexed to Woodstyck.

WOOLVERCOT is a parish in the hundred of Wootton, county court district of Oxford, union of Woodstock and rural deanery, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 2¾ north-north-west from Oxford and 2½ miles south-east from the Yarnton station on the Oxford and Birmingham railway. The village takes its name from Ulgarus or Wolgarus, a Saxon who dwelt here, and was given to the abbey of Godstow by Bernardus de S. Walerico. The Isis, Oxford canal and the Great Western railway pass through the parish. The church of St. Peter, formerly a chapel attached to the church of St. Peter-in-the-East, Oxford, is a small plainly built structure, chiefly in the late Rectilinear style, and consisting of chancel, nave, north aisle with chapel, south porch and a western battlemented tower containing 5 bells; the chancel is of two bays, with a Rectilinear east window, the chancel arch Transition Norman, and affixed to the impost is an ancient hour-glass stand: the pulpit placed below this is hexagonal and affords a fine example of Tudor wood-carving; each of its panelled sides is ornamented with the linear pattern, with flowing tracery above, and surmounting the cornice is a continuous raised book board, also panelled and elaborately carved with foliage; the nave arcade has five arches on circular piers; the roof is open-timbered, of Rectilinear date, as also is the south door; at the east end of the aisle on the north side, entered by a wide Decorated arch, is a low-roofed chapel, containing a large and fine altar tomb to Sir John Walter, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and Groom of the Chamber to King Charles II. ob. 1630; the tomb bears the effigy of the judge, fully robed and wearing his collar of SS.; on either side of him are the effigies of his two wives, while at the head are the kneeling figures of three daughters and at the foot of three sons: all the figures are painted and gilt: the tower is of three stages and has a west door, and above it a good three-light Rectilinear window; the roof is of stone, supported by stone ribs and forming a pointed vault. In the churchyard, on the north side of the chancel, is a railed tomb to Mr. William Clarke, of this place, 1847, and his fourth wife, Elizabeth, 1860; he was formerly of Middleton Stoney, Oxon, belonging to an ancient family of long standing in the counties of Warwick, Northampton and Oxon. The register dates from the year 1596. The living is a vicarage, yearly value £170 with residence, in the gift of the Warden and fellows of Merton College, Oxford, and held since 1883 by the Rev. William Moore Richardson M.A. of Merton College, Oxford. Here is a paper mill belonging to the University of Oxford. The Duke of Marlborough, who is lord of the manor, Sir H. W. Dashwood bart. St. John's College and Worcester College, Oxford, are the principal landowners. The soil is clay; subsoil, clay and gravel. The chief crops are wheat and barley. The area is 1,600 acres; rateable value, £4,464: the population in 1881 was 733.

GODSTOW, situated on the Isis, about three-quarters-of-a-mile south, was formerly extra-parochial; the river is crossed here by a bridge of two arches, one pointed the other round, and in part ancient, over which passes the road from Woolvercot to Witham. The place now consists only of the well-known and excellent riverside hostelry called "The Trout," which immediately joins the bridge, and is in considerable repute as a house of entertainment for boating men and anglers: in the meadow opposite are the remains of the Benedictine nunnery of St. Mary and John the Baptist, founded in 1138 by Edith, wife, as is supposed, of Robert D'Oiley, on a site given by John de St. John, who was a considerable benefactor to the foundation. The church was dedicated by Alexander, Bishop of Lincoln, in December, 1136, and was consecrated in the presence of King Stephen, his Queen Maude, and Prince Eustace; in this abbey Rosamund, sister of Walter, Lord Clifford, sometime mistress of King Henry II. and popularly known as "Fair Rosamund," passed her last years in penitence, and dying about 1175, was buried in the abbey church before the high altar; here the king erected a rich hearse, covered with white silk, and adorned with burning tapers and waving banners, but St. Hugh, Bishop of Lincoln, visiting the abbey about 1195, ordered the removal of the remains to the nun's chapterhouse or chapel, which still remains at the angle formed by the south and east boundary walls; it is a Perpendicular building, now roofless, but retains its east window, with two square-headed and two small round-headed windows, and an entrance doorway at the north-east corner; the interior plastering is covered with the pencilled names of visitors; the remainder of the abbey walls is of considerable extent, and a great part of it has Perpendicular basement mouldings, and on the north side is a built-up gateway of the same period; with a four-centered recessed arch, and a good dripstone. The space enclosed by these walls has long been used for cattle and other farm purposes. At the time of its surrender there were 18 nuns, and the yearly revenue was estimated at £274.

Parish Clerk, James Stone.

WOOTTON is a village and parish in the hundred of the same name, within the parliamentary borough of Woodstock, Woodstock union, county court district of Oxford, Woodstock rural deanery and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, 3½ miles west-by-north from the Kirtlington station, on the Oxford and Birmingham railway, 2½ north from Woodstock and 10 from Oxford, situate on the Glyme and Dorne, which flow into Blenheim lake. The church of St. Mary is a structure of stone, in the Early English and later styles, consisting of chancel, nave, clerestoried north aisle, south porch and a western embattled tower containing a clock and 5 bells, the first dated 1749; three others, 1732, and the tenor bell 1739; there is also a small sanctus bell, with date 1788: the chancel is Decorated, with an east window of four lights and a plain chancel arch; the nave is divided from its aisle by an arcade of four Early English arches, and some of the windows and the south doorway are also of this period; the clerestory and roof are late Perpendicular and the tower is of the same date; the aisle is Decorated, with a doorway; there is a plain octagonal Early English font: there are memorials in the church to Richard Rowlandson, rector 1687-91, and Hannah, his wife; Robert Bowsher LL.B., rector, 1692-1720; Thomas Lee LL.B. rector, 1720-56; and John Cary M.A. rector, 1756-64; Lancelot Charles Lee M.A. rector, 1825-36, who died in 1841, is buried in the churchyard, where is also a monument to William Blackstone Lee, rector, 1836-74 and his daughter Alice, 1870; over the south entrance is a sun-dial, with a Latin inscription from Ovid, Metamorphoses, Bk. iv. lines 224-6, slightly altered and the date 1623. The church was restored in 1876 at a cost of about £1,100. The register dates from the year 1564. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £800 with residence and 585 acres of glebe, in the gift of New College, Oxford and held since 1878 by the Rev. Arthur Edward Robinson M.A. formerly fellow of that college. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels here. The church estate, of seven cottages, 51 acres of land and a sum of about £337 in Consols, produces about £95 yearly for the repairs of the church. Killingworth's bequest of £6 a year, left in 1852, is distributed in money, subject to certain fixed deductions; the poor's land of 15 acres produces about £10, which is distribnted in coals. Woodleys is the seat of the Hon. Edwin Charles William Ponsonby J.P. The Duke of Marlborough, who is lord of the manor, and Sir Henry William Dashwood bart. are the principal landowners. The soil is oolite; subsoil, stone brash. The land, principally arable, is barley land. The area is 3,930 acres; rateable value, £5,986 13s. 1d.; the population in 1881 was 1,080, but this includes that portion of the parish called Old Woodstock, which by an Order of the Privy Council has for ecclesiastical purposes been annexed to Woodstock, and which forms a part of the town of Woodstock.

Parish Clerk, Barrington Buggins.

NETHER WORTON is a village and parish 3 miles west from Deddington, 5 south-west from Aynho station, 9 south from Banbury and 11 from Woodstock, in Wootton hundred, Woodstock union and county court district, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of St. James is a stone building in the Early English and Decorated styles, consisting of chancel, nave, aisles and a western tower, placed at the end of the south aisle, which is covered with ivy and contains 2 bells: the nave has arcades of three arches on octagonal pillars with moulded caps: the tower bears the date 1630, and its lower stage forms a porch, with a good Early English doorway; there are some handsome monuments to the Wilson family. The register of baptisms and marriages dates from the year 1562; burials, 1784. The living is a vicarage, yearly value £53, in the gift of Sir John Beauchamp Hayes bart. and held since 1881 by the Rev. Harry William Wilson M.A. of Jesus College, Cambridge, who is also rector and resides at Over Worton. Sir John Beauchamp Hayes bart. who is lord of the manor, M. P. W. Boulton esq. and Joseph Painter esq. are the principal landowners. The soil is strong loam; subsoil, clay. The land (with the exception of about 90 acres of arable) is pasture. The area is 713 acres; rateable value, £1,373; the population in 1881 was 61.

OVER WORTON is a small village and parish about 4 miles south-west from Deddington and 4½ west from Somerton station, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Woodstock, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of the Holy Trinity, pleasantly situated on an eminence, is an edifice in the Decorated style, almost entirely rebuilt (retaining some of the old work) by Mr. Derick in 1844: it consists of chancel, nave, south aisle and a tower on the south side of the nave, erected in 1849 and containing 2 bells: the church plate includes a chalice of pure silver with cover dated 1574. The register dates from the year 1628. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £230, with residence and including the rent of about 40 acres of glebe, let for £100, in the gift of Mrs. Wilson and held since 1881 by her son, the Rev. Harry William Wilson M.A. of Jesus College, Cambridge, who is also vicar of Nether Worton. There is a sum of £1 14s. 8d. for distribution in bread. Mrs. Wilson is lady of the manor and sole landowner. The soil is a red sandy loam; subsoil, limestone, clay and sand. The land, arable and pasture, about equal; there are about 84 acres of woodland. The area is 623 acres; rateable value, £1,089; the population in 1881 was 66.

WROXTON is a parish 3 miles west-north-west from Banbury and 25 north-west from Oxford, in the hundred of Bloxham, union and county court district of Banbury, rural deanery of Deddington and archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church of All Saints, situated upon elevated ground on the east side of the village street, is an edifice in the Decorated style of the fourteenth century, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, aisles, and western embattled tower surmounted by four pinnacles and containing 5 bells: the chancel has a stained window of five lights, and a reredos with panelling of foreign carved oak, representing various scripture subjects; there is also a fine altar tomb of alabaster, supporting on Ionic pillars with circular arches, a flat canopy of marble, beneath which are finely carved effigies recumbent of Sir William Pope K.B. first Earl of Downe, ob. 1631, and Lady Anne, his wife; the former is habited in half-armour, mantle and ruff, and on the head an earl's coronet, and the latter in a long robe, with ruff and veil; at the head kneel two sons and at the feet one daughter; all three hold books; over the canopy is the achievement of arms and the motto, "Auspicante Deo," and at the angles emblematic figures: on the south side is a large mural monument to Catherine, Countess of Guilford, 1766; Lucy, Lady Guilford, 1734; and Elizabeth, Lady North and Guilford, 1745: there are two sedilia, under a refoiled arch, and floor stones inscribed to Beata, Countess Downe, 1660; Sir Thomas Pope, Earl Downe, 1660, with incised arms; inscriptions on brass to Margaret, wife of William Pope, gent. 1577; Anne, wife of Sir Owen Hopton, 1599; and Jane, widow of Sir John Finet, 1652: the altar rails are of foreign carved oak; beyond these, westward, is a mural monument, by Flaxman, with a statue of Britannia and lion to Frederick, Earl of Guilford K.G. Chancellor of the University of Oxford, 1792; floor stones inscribed to Thomas, Earl Downe, 1667; Francis, Lord Guilford, 1685, and various other memorials to the North and Pope families, 1678-1719; the family of Morton, 1704-5: the lofty chancel is closely hung on both sides with the funeral banners of the Popes and Norths, and on the walls are suspended several coronets, an embroidered surcoat, helmet with mantling, gauntlets, spurs and sword, besides seven hatchments: a screen of Decorated character, with a central arch, flanked on each side by three of smaller size, separates the chancel and nave, and is curiously ornamented with portions of carved work of foreign execution; the pulpit and the staircase leading to it have been similarly treated, and the effect, if incongruous, has a certain richness: the nave of four bays is Decorated and has a Perpendicular clerestory: the north aisle has some indications of a reredos under the east window, and retains an altar stone and a piscina: among the mural monuments is one to Thomas Sacheverell esq. 1675; and the floor stones in this and the south aisle include one to Robert Burden, of Balscote, gent. 1677; a similar stone in the nave is inscribed to John Burden, 1687: the font is octagonal with canopies and figures of good Decorated work: over the chancel arch are the royal arms of George I.: the tower, with the exception of the base, has been rebuilt in a somewhat debased style: a large new organ has lately been placed in a gallery at the west end, at a cost of £280. The register dates from the year 1548. The living is a vicarage with the chapelry of Balscote in this parish, joint net yearly value £244 with residence, in the gift of Col. J. S. and the Baroness North and held since 1878 by the Rev. John Robert Izat M.A. of St. John's College, Oxford. The Wesleyans have a chapel here. The poor's allotment of 17 acres produces £36 yearly for fuel. The proceeds of eight acres of land is for defraying church expenses. A short distance southward of the church is Wroxton Abbey, the seat of Col. J. S. North M.P. and the Baroness North: the greater part of the present mansion was built in 1618 by Sir William Pope, afterwards Earl of Downe, who was nephew of Sir Thomas Pope, founder of Trinity College, Oxford; the mansion occupies the site of a priory, founded about 1230 by Michael Belet and dedicated to the Virgin Mary, for a prior and six canons of the order of St. Augustine; some arches and other remains of this building are incorporated in the present structure; the hall, 45ft. by 25ft. in dimensions, has a curious screen and gallery at the lower end, leading to some of the chambers on the upper story; the library and chapel, a work of the Decorated period, as well as the dining-room, which contains a valuable collection of family portraits, are exceedingly interesting as specimens of the ancient domestic style of building: adjoining the abbey are some beautiful pleasure grounds and flower gardens, laid out in terraces and corresponding with the style of the building. Trinity College, Oxford, own the manorial rights. The principal landowners are Trinity College, Oxford; Christ Church, Oxford, and Col. North M.P. The soil is red loam; subsoil, red sandstone &c. The crops are general. The area, including Balscote, is 2,350 acres; rateable value, £4,929; the population in 1881 was 662.

YARNTON, originally "Eardingtun," is a village parish, and station on the Oxford and Birmingham railway, 68 miles from London, 4 north-north-west from Oxford and 3 from Woodstock, in the hundred of Wootton, union and county court district of Woodstock, rural deanery of Woodstock, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. Here is the junction of the line from Witney with the Great Western line for Worcester. The church of St. Bartholomew is an edifice principally of Early English date, and consists of chancel with south aisle or chapel, nave, south aisle, south porch, and a western embattled tower at the end of the aisle: the chancel has an east window of three lancet lights, filled with stained glass by the late Alderman Fletcher, of Oxford: the nave arcade is Early English, with piers and arches of good character; the roofs of both nave and aisle are Perpendicular; some other remains of ancient glass in the north window exhibit figures of monks, a bishop with the name 'Nicholaus,' and an archbishop with that of 'Thomas': in the Spencer aisle is a fine monument, with standing effigies of Sir Thomas Spencer, his wife, their only son William, and four daughters; there is also a canopied tomb to Sir William Spencer, and several mural tablets of Althorp kt. 1609; Margaret, his wife, 1608: the church also contains an altar tomb to Alderman William Fletcher, of Oxford, who died in 1826 ætat 87, with his effigy in brass: above the communion table are several scriptural pieces, in sculptured alabaster of the fifteenth century, representing Our Saviour in the Lap of the Virgin, the Offering of the Wise Men, the Betrayal with a Kiss and the Bearing of the Cross; these were discovered under the floor of a house in the parish of St. Peter in the East, Oxford, near St. Edmund Hall, and were purchased by Alderman Fletcher, and given to this church: the existing tower, remarkable for the exactness and finish of its masonry, was built by Sir Thomas Spencer in 1612; he also erected the chancel or Spencer aisle, and contributed to the erection of the south porch in 1616: in the chapel is placed the Old Norman font, rescued some years ago from an adjoining farmyard: the Perpendicular font now in use is said to have been brought from St. Michael's church, Oxford, and was also presented by the Alderman: in the churchyard is a curious Early English cross, consisting of a ribbed shaft with canopied niches enclosing figures on a carved geometric base placed on two circular steps. The register dates from the year 1569. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value from tithe rent charge £290 with residence, in the gift of Sir W. H. Dashwood bart. who has three turns, and All Souls College, Oxford, one turn, and held since 1878 by the Rev. James Alexander Balleine M.A. of Exeter College, Oxford. Of Sir T. Spencer's charity of £10 yearly £2 12s. 6d. is for the school, £4 7s. 6d. for the poor and £3 for a sermon. The late Alderman Fletcher, of Oxford, erected a house for the parish clerk, with one room to serve as a school for the parish children and left some bequests to the poor. Sir H. W. Dashwood bart. is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The soil is clay and sand; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are wheat and barley. The area is 1,613 acres; rateable value, £3,902; the population in 1881 was 279.

YELFORD is a parish, 3 miles south from Witney railway station, 3½ north-east from Bampton and 2 north-east from Bampton Aston, in the hundred of Bampton, union and county court district of Witney, rural deanery of Witney, archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. This parish contains but two houses, one an old manor house and now a farm, the other the rectory house, which, however, is but a cottage. The church of St. Swithin is a small edifice in the Perpendicular style, consisting of chancel and nave and south porch, with 2 bells hung in openings in the western gable: the font is cup-shaped and panelled, and there is a good rood screen; the church was restored and repaired in 1869 to 1873. The register of baptisms dates from the year 1745; marriages, 1770; burials take place at Ducklington; the older registers are lost or destroyed. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £115 with 7 acres of glebe let for £11, in the gift of Edmund Kyffin Lenthall esq. and held since 1882 by the Rev. Charles Richard Powys M.A. of Exeter and St. John's Colleges, Oxford, who resides at Newbury. Edmund Kyffin Lenthall esq. is lord of the manor and sole landowner. The soil is loam and clay; subsoil, clay. The chief crops are wheat, beans, barley and turnips. The area is 327 acres; rateable value, £386; the population in 1881 was 8.

The Business of this Company consists in the Purchase of or Loans upon:

REVERSIONARY INTERESTS, vested or contingent, in LANDED or FUNDED PROPERTY, or SECURITIES; also LIFE INTERESTS in POSSESSION, as well as in EXPECTATION.

LOANS UPON REVERSIONS may be obtained either at an Annual Interest, or in consideration of deferred charges, payable upon the REVERSIONS falling in.

PRESENT INCOMES are likewise advanced upon the latter principle to persons entitled to Reversionary Interests, who may thus obtain the means of support until their property falls into possession, without being called upon for any payment until that event.

Prospectuses and Forms of Proposal may be obtained from the Secretary, to whom all communications should be addressed.

The Corporation has granted Fire, Life, and Marine Assurances for more than a century and a half. During that long period it has endeavoured to introduce into its practice all the real improvements that have from time to time been suggested, and to afford every facility for the transaction of business.

Of the Share Capital the sum of £448,275 has been paid up; the total Funds on the 31st December, 1882 exceeded Three Millions sterling.

Claims under Life Policies are payable upon proof of death and title being furnished to the satisfaction of the Court of Directors, without as hitherto deferring the settlement for a period of three months.

Copies of the Accounts pursuant to "The Life Assurance Companies' Act, 1870," can be had on application personally, or by letter.

Policy Claims Paid	7,960,000

The ASSOCIATION employs NO AGENTS, and pays NO COMMISSION in any shape for the introduction of Policies.

Its expenses are small, being about 3 per cent. of its annual income from premiums and interest.

An investigation of its affairs is made every year, and the surplus is applied to the reduction of the Premiums until they are extinguished, and then to the increase of the sum assured. The reduction begins with the eighth premium.

During the last 30 years the reduction has increased, on an average, at the rate of about One per cent. per annum, and as the mortality among its Members continues to be much within the estimate, and the funds of the Society are invested at a higher rate of interest than is assumed in the valuations, it is expected that the Premiums may be still further reduced.

PREMIUMS commenced before July 1876 (3rd series), are this year reduced 76 per cent.
" " July 1865 (2nd series), " 91 "
" " January 1856 (1st series), " 100 "

And, as the reduction of premiums in the First Series can be carried no further, an addition of One per cent. of the annual premium has been made to the sum assured.

THE BUSINESS OF THE COMPANY

Has increased steadily year by year until it has attained its present large amount, and during the last 20 years its progress has been very rapid.

The Annual Revenue exceeds EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND POUNDS STERLING.

The Accumulated and Invested Fund is now nearly SIX MILLIONS STERLING.

The Directors invite particular attention to the new terms and conditions of the Free Assurance Scheme, under which persons assured are allowed to reside in any part of the world free of Extra Premium.

FREE ASSURANCE.—Persons not less than 25 years of age who, when proposing for Assurance, satisfy the Directors that they have no intention or prospect of proceeding abroad, from their occupation and other circumstances, are charged the ordinary Home Premium, and may afterwards proceed to and reside in any part of the world without Extra Premium.

Existing Policy Holders shall have the benefit of the new terms and conditions, on application to that effect, provided the Directors are satisfied that such new benefit ought to be conferred.

POLICIES OF FIVE YEARS' DURATION effected for the whole term of life, at a uniform rate of premium, may, with certain exceptions, be renewed within thirteen months of date of lapsing on payment of a Fine; and, in the event of death, the claims will be paid subject to deduction of Premiums unpaid and Fines.

POLICIES OF LESS THAN FIVE YEARS' DURATION may be renewed within Thirteen Months on very favourable terms.

The PROFITS of the Company have been divided on ten occasions:—1835-40-45, 1850-55, 1860-65, 1870-75 and 1880.

The next DIVISION OF PROFITS for 5 years, ending 15th November, 1885, will be declared in 1886.

Surrender Value granted after one annual payment on With Profit Policies, or three annual payments on those Without Profit, or loans granted on such Policies within their surrender value.

One of the Medical Officers attends at the London Office, 83, King William Street, City, daily, at half-past one, excepting Thursdays.

Every information can be obtained at any of the Offices or Agencies of the Company.

BELL'S ASBESTOS.

BELL'S PURE ASBESTOS PLAITED YARN PACKING.

This is the best and most economical Piston Packing in the market for High and Low Pressure Stationary Engines. Of course there are many worthless imitations of a Packing so universally approved of, but I am the Original Maker and Sole Manufacturer of the genuine article as used in the British and German Navies. To avoid imposition users should require to see my Trade Mark, which is on every 10 feet length of the Packing made by me, and without this none is genuine.

The following Testimonial refers to this Packing:—

SEWAGE WORKS, Winchester, January 12, 1883.

Mr. J. BELL, Asbestos Works, London.—Dear Sir,—I have great pleasure in saying that the Asbestos Packing I had from you is the best I have ever used, though I have used other Asbestos Packings not of your make. As an example, one of my piston rod glands was packed with it, and has been working night and day since October 26th without re-packing. I have not been able to run so long with any other make. I am Sir, yours truly,

J. ASHCROFT, Chief Engineer.

Portsmouth, February 20th, 1883.

Mr. JOHN BELL, Asbestos Works, London.—SIR,—Your Asbestos Steam Packing that you have been supplying for some considerable time, I can recommend to steam users generally as being the very best that was ever introduced into the market for piston glands, slide throttle and throttle valve glands. I can, after considerable experience, say that it is the very best that I have ever used. We run our engine at between 80 and 90 revolutions per minute, and I may add that there is no work more trying than saw-mill work.

Yours truly,

WM. HATCHER,

Engineer at BAILEY'S Steam Saw Mills, Portsmouth

BELL'S ASBESTOS FELT,

A cheap material to be placed between ceiling and upper floor to prevent spread of fire.

BELL'S ASBESTOS AND HAIR FELT COVERING,

For Hot Water and Steam Pipes, to prevent Radiation and ensure Transmission of Heat; also to protect from Frost.

BELL'S ASBESTOS BOILER COVERING COMPOSITION, for coating the Boilers of every kind of Marine and Stationary Engines.

It is non-combustible, and can be easily and quickly applied at any time, whether steam is up or not. It adheres to iron and metals, and preserves them from rust.

THE MAXIM WESTON ELECTRIC CO. (Limited), 29, Bankside, S.E., London, 4th January, 1883.

Mr. JOHN BELL, 118, Southwark-street, S.E.—DEAR SIR,—In answer to your request I beg to inform you that I find the thermometer, placed three feet above the boilers, now stands at 93 degs.; before your Covering was put on it used to stand at 126 degs. With regard to the saving in fuel, I am unable to speak very accurately, as the boilers were not working long enough before being covered to ascertain the amount of fuel that would be consumed in an ordinary run, but I feel quite justified in saying that we burn less by about 5 cwt. per night than we were doing, and I shall be glad at any time to show the boilers to anyone who may wish to see them, as I consider yours the best covering that I have up to the present seen. Yours faithfully, (Signed) J. H. CUNDALL, Works Manager.

BELL'S ASBESTOS BLOCKS AND LUMPS FOR GAS FIRES.

BELL'S PURE CLOSELY-WOVEN ASBESTOS CLOTH,

For Protection against Fire.

BELL'S ASBESTOS and INDIA RUBBER WOVEN TAPE.

It has been found very efficient for making blue pipe joints. It can be bent by hand, without puckering, to the form required, and is especially useful in making manhole and mudhole doors; also for large "still" joints where boiling fat and acids of all kinds have to be resisted. For these latter purposes it is kept in rolls of 100 feet, in various widths from 1 in. to 2½ in. wide by ¼ in. to ⅝ in. thick. Manhole cover joints made of this material can be lifted twenty times before renewal is necessary. This Tape is also made in any width and thickness, so that it is suitable for every class of joint. It is also made in sheets about 40 in. square, from 1-16 in. thick upwards, and each sheet bears my Trade Mark to protect users against imitations. Every 10 ft. length of the tape has a label attached bearing my Trade Mark, and users are earnestly requested to see that the label is attached, to prevent imposition by worthless imitations.

The engineer of a world-renowned firm writes:—"There is not, nor can there be, any doubt as to the excellence of your Asbestos and Indiarubber Woven Sheeting—as a jointing material it is unrivalled."

The engineer of a large colliery writes:—'I would in all candour say that your Asbestos and Indiarubber Woven Sheeting is first-rate for joints. In my twenty-five years' experience I have not seen anything like it. I highly recommend it to all those who have to do with steam engines."

BELL'S ASBESTOS YARN AND SOAP-STONE PACKING, for Locomotive Engines, Cranes, &c.

The following Testimonial refers to this Packing:—

Festiniog Railway, Locomotive Superintendent's Office, Portmadoc, January, 13th, 1883.

Mr. JOHN BELL, 118, Southwark-street, S.E.

DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in saying that the Asbestos Yarn and Soapstone Packing gives every satisfaction, indeed better than we expected. We have a locomotive packed with it, and has been running five months (and think of the piston speed with our small wheels). I think the Soapstone a great improvement, as it keeps the Packing elastic and prevents it getting hard. I am very pleased with its working, and also the very low price for such good lasting packing. The Asbestos Yarn we find is very useful and answers admirably. Yours truly, (Signed) W. WILLIAMS.

BELL'S ASBESTOS ROLLED CLOTH PACKING, for Marine Engines.

Every 10 feet length of the above Packings has a label attached bearing my Trade Mark, without which none is genuine. The following Testimonial refers to the Asbestos Cloth Packing:—

S.S. "NORFOLK," S.W. India Docks, London, February 28th, 1882.

JOHN BELL, Esq.—SIR,—I have great pleasure in reporting on your Asbestos Cloth Rope Packing which you sent me on trial. I tried it one of two H.P. Piston rods, and it ran 90 days without repacking. The other H.P. Piston Rod was packed with a similar form of packing, not composed of Asbestos, and was repacked 10 times during the 90 days. I have recommended it both at Sydney and Melbourne, and shall do my best to take this packing in whatever steamers I may have to do with.—I remain, Sir, yours truly,

W. W. PROPHET, Chief Engineer, S.S. "NORFOLK."

BELL'S SPECIAL LONDON-MADE ASBESTOS MILLBOARD, for Dry Steam Joints, Electric-Dynamo Machines, &c.

Made in sheets measuring about 40 inches square, from 1-64th inch to 1 inch, and ½ millimètre to 25 millimètres thick. Each sheet bears my Trade Mark, without which none is genuine.

DEVERILL'S
PATENT IRRIGATOR

THIS admirable invention is fast gaining popularity, and is deservedly adjudged the most perfect apparatus ever invented for saving time, labour and water. Specially adapted for Lawn Tennis and Cricket Grounds. Invaluable for Conservatories, Vineries, Ferneries, Blight Washing for Hops, Wall Trees, Roses, &c., &c. Gardens may be kept in their natural beauty and profit, and enormous crops may be grown during the hottest weather by the judicious use at morning and evening of this self-acting Appliance (which can be left for several hours without attention if required). Wherever exhibited it has gained the highest award of merit, and won golden opinions from the Press, while the increasing number of testimonials received from all parties who have used the same is the best evidence of its value.

MADE IN ALL SIZES FROM £3.

COPY TESTIMONIAL.

DEAR SIR, SHIPBORNE GRANGE, TUNBRIDGE, 6 h September, 1882.

I like your Patent Irrigator immensely. I think it will be of great use, it beats the best watering and the most genial shower.

READING MERCURY

AND

BERKS COUNTY PAPER.

ESTABLISHED 1723.

Published every Saturday Morning, at the Offices, Reading and Newbury, and other Branch Offices, and very extensively and expeditiously circulated throughout Berkshire and in the princ.pal Towns and Villages in adjoining and distant Counties over a wide area. The

READING MERCURY

IS THE

COUNTY PAPER FOR BERKS,

And has a very large circulation among the most influential families of the neighbourhood, as well as the leading Agricultural and Commercial classes, in Berks, Bucks, Hants, Oxon, and Wilts.

The READING MERCURY offers unusual advantages as an Advertising medium, since from its wide circulation and the influential position it occupies amongst the Provincial Newspapers, ADVERTISEMENTS are brought under the notice of MANY THOUSAND READERS each week.

An Early Edition is published every Friday evening in time for the night mails, and to ensure insertion, Advertisements should reach the Office on Thursday.

Head Office :—MARKET PLACE, READING.

READING OBSERVER,

The Recognised Organ of the Liberal Party in Reading and Berkshire.

AVERAGE WEEKLY CIRCULATION ABOUT 10,000.

Published every Saturday Morning. Eight Pages, One-Penny.

THE READING OBSERVER, BERKS TELEGRAPH, AND BUCKS, HANTS, OXFORDSHIRE AND SURREY NEWSPAPER, has an average weekly circulation of about 10,000, extending over a most important agricultural district, including Reading, Twyford, Wargrave, Henley-on-Thames, Maidenhead, Slough, and Windsor; Theale, Newbury, and Hungerford; Mortimer, and Basingstoke; Wokingham, Ascot, Sandhurst, and Bracknell, and other neighbouring Towns and Villages. Its list of bonâ fide Subscribers contains the names of M.P.'s, Bankers, Magistrates, Clergy, country gentlemen and eminent commercial men.

THE READING OBSERVER is the recognised organ of the Liberal party in Reading and Berkshire; the editorial comments are written by gentlemen of very high literary position, and no expense is spared in any department to make it the most complete and reliable record of local events. It is, moreover, the officially appointed medium for district Government notices, and is in every respect a thoroughly High-Class Newspaper. New Offices and Machinery of the best construction have lately been built in Blagrave Street, close to the Railway Stations and Public Offices, and every facility is now available to meet the growing demands of a large and increasing circulation.

THE READING OBSERVER offers unexceptional advantages to Advertisers, from its large and important circulation, which is continually increasing, and the esteem in which it is held may be judged from the extensive advertising connection already gained. Specimen Copies and Quotations forwarded on application. The paper is forwarded by post to any part of the United Kingdom on payment in advance of 7s. per annum.

Advertisers and Subscribers are requested to make their Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to the Publisher, C. SLAUGHTER, the letters to him being addressed to BLAGRAVE STREET, READING.

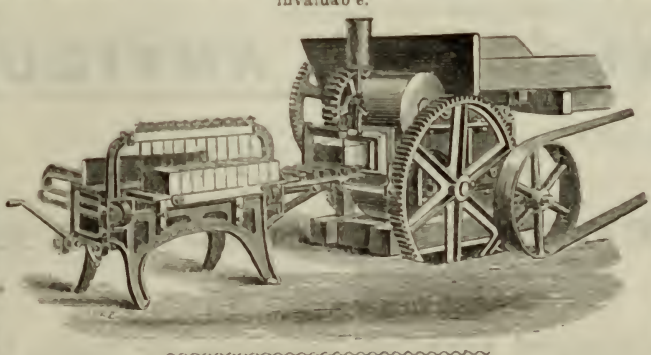
TO BRICKMAKERS, ETC.



CLEWS' IMPROVED BRICK, TILE AND PIPE MAKING MACHINE.

J. CLEWS begs to call attention to his new high-class Brick Making Machine, which to makers requiring a really sound and good brick is invaluable.

AMONG THE ADVANTAGES these Machines have over others are they are low, the PUG BOX which is in an horizontal position, being only 3ft. from the ground, and are entirely devoid of bevil gearing.

THE PUGGING APPARATUS is very effective and will work up any plastic material without any previous preparation, and make the bricks sufficiently stiff to act 7 or 8 high.

THE DIE is brass-lined and requires no fustian, and can easily be attached to any other make of Brick Machine.

They are capable of making from 15,000 to 20,000 bricks per day when driven by an 8 H.P. Engine, and if desired, can at an extra cost be fitted with WINDING GEAR for bringing the clay to the Pug box.

These Machines are simple in construction, of the very best material and workmanship, and for neatness and efficiency of their work, combined with the low price, are not to be equalled by any other machine in the market, and wherever they have been placed give the greatest satisfaction. Testimonials on application.

NO MORE WET FEET!!

IF YOU ONCE USE

MILLEN'S

Snow and Wet Repeller and Sole Protector,

FOR

WINTER AND SUMMER,

YOU WILL NOT REGRET IT.

Although it is a speciality for the bottoms of the soles, it is equally beneficial to leather and kid uppers, not only rendering them quite waterproof, but more durable; also the ORIGINAL SHAPE OF THE BOOT IS KEPT UNTIL QUITE WORN OUT, which gives a corresponding benefit to SHAPE and EASE of the FOOT.

For Children's and Ladies' Shoes, also the heavier made boots, it is invaluable.

NOT PROTECTED 5s. to 7s. SAVED FOR SIXPENCE. PROTECTED.

Only one application, as directions, will last until the soles and uppers are worn out. Shoes can be blacked in the usual way.

By the use of this valuable concrete, WET, SNOW and DIRT are entirely prevented from soaking into and destroying the leather soles, THE FEET ARE KEPT WARM. A CHEAP PAIR OF BOOTS dressed with it last as long as a 30s. pair, not so protected. This is particularly noticeable in CHILDREN'S BOOTS, when, owing to the bad leather employed in their manufacture, the water soaks through the soles, wets the feet, gives cold, and often ends by sowing the seeds of a disease which may prove fatal.

THE WET REPELLER also keeps from rusting gun barrels, tricycles, knives, horses' bits, garden tools, and all metals. To be applied with a warm rag. Quotations given for 7lbs., 14lbs. and upwards.

Prepared only by, and sent by Post from HUMPHREY MILLEN, for One Shilling,

THE COUNTY CONSERVATIVE PAPER,

AND THE BEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM IN AND AROUND BUCKINGHAMSHIRE.

THE BUCKS HERALD

(ESTABLISHED 1832,)

Permanently enlarged in 1879 from 48 to 56 columns weekly, and otherwise improved both in its Literary and Mechanical Departments, no effort or expense being spared to make it more completely than hitherto

THE COUNTY PAPER.

THE HERALD is the recognised organ of the Church and Conservative party, and numbers amongst its Subscribers the Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and leading Agriculturists throughout Buckinghamshire and the borders of the adjacent Counties. It is strictly devoted to the interests of the Farmers, and, besides being a good Family Newspaper, giving a careful summary of the News of the Week, it supplies full and accurate reports of all important County Meetings, being represented in all parts of the district by an efficient staff of correspondents.

TO ADVERTISERS.

THE BUCKS HERALD, from the largeness and high character of its circulation, offers unusual facilities to Advertisers. It furnishes the best medium for bringing before the Public announcements of Estates to be Sold or Let, Sales of Farming Stock, and Agricultural Produce generally, and for all announcements requiring extensive publicity. Special care is taken to ensure accuracy in the publication of all Legal and Parliamentary Notices.

Printed and Published every Friday (for Saturday), Price 2d., by the Proprietor,

C. TURNER DE FRAINE, WALTON STREET, AYLESBURY,

And may be had by Post direct from the Office; at Messrs. Smith & Sons' Railway Bookstalls; or through all Newsagents.

NEWPORT PAGNELL, BUCKS.

THE ONLY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE DISTRICT (INCLUDING THE COUNTIES OF BUCKS BEDS, HERTS, HUNTS & NORTHANTS,) THAT CIRCULATES LARGELY & MAINTAINS STRICT NEUTRALITY.

CROYDON'S WEEKLY STANDARD,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, PRICE ONE PENNY,

WAS established in 1859 to meet the wants of a district in which no paper was published; it is of a strictly Neutral Character, consequently read by all classes, and as an advertising medium will be found well suited to the wants of Advertisers generally.

Advertisements of an objectionable nature are not inserted in the columns of this paper, and a Cash remittance must accompany advertisements from strangers, or they cannot be inserted.

Proprietor:—J. LINE, ST. JOHN STREET, NEWPORT PAGNELL.

OXFORD CHRONICLE AND BERKS AND BUCKS GAZETTE.

Established 1837.

Price 1*d.*; Half-yearly by Post, 2*s.* 9*d.*

Is published every Friday Afternoon, and circulated the same evening in all the Towns and Villages in the District.

An Agricultural, Commercial, and Family Newspaper. The local and district reports are more full and complete than in any other Newspaper in the locality. Being the only Liberal Newspaper in the County, it has a special circulation not possessed by any other journal. It has a larger circulation among the trading, professional, and commercial classes than any other Newspaper in the County, and is, therefore, the best medium for Auction, Business, Official, and other Advertisements.

The "OXFORD RAILWAY GUIDE" is published on the 1st of every month, price One Penny.

THE BEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM IN THE SOUTH OF BUCKS.

THE SOUTH BUCKS FREE PRESS,

WYCOMBE, MAIDENHEAD AND MARLOW JOURNAL AND SOUTH OXFORDSHIRE GAZETTE.

Published at HIGH WYCOMBE EVERY FRIDAY, PRICE ONE PENNY.

The above Journal circulates over a wide manufacturing and agricultural district, comprising the southern part of Buckinghamshire and the adjoining portions of Oxfordshire and Berks. It is the only newspaper published at High Wycombe, the centre of the chair manufacture, and a market town of considerable importance (population in 1881, 13,154). It has also an extensive circle of readers in the favourite Thames-side towns, Maidenhead and Great Marlow; in Chesham, Amersham, Beaconsfield, Princes Risborough, Wallington, Thame and Stokenchurch, as well as in the villages of the district.

Great care being taken to give impartial and accurate reports of all local events, the FREE PRESS is generally regarded in the district as a high-class reliable Journal and a good family newspaper. It is a recognised medium for parliamentary and official announcements.

THIS SCHOOL has been established to afford parents and guardians an opportunity of securing for their boys a system of instruction which will combine the advantages of a select private Academy with the healthy discipline and teaching of a well managed Public School.

The Principal is a Government Trained and Certificated Master, and has been a successful Teacher for upwards of twenty years. The Curriculum of Studies is arranged with special regard to practical utility in the after career of the scholar.

The Town of High Wycombe is pleasantly situated among the Chiltern Hills, and is a proverbially healthy spot; the death rate for the past year being only 14 per 1,000 of the population.

Reference kindly permitted to most of the leading inhabitants of the town and neighbourhood.

UNSATISFACTORY WARMING

Of the new Manchester Workhouse, Manchester, which is warmed by other than the Manchester Grates.

Dr. Muir, H.M. Inspector of the Local Government Board, in his report of the above says that the warming of the wards is very defective, as shown in the very heavy mortality from lung disease, no fewer than 320 out of 789 deaths having been due to bronchitis, consumption, and inflammation of the lungs. Additional means of warming was very urgently needed.—(Vide the Manchester Guardian, August 26, 1881.)

SATISFACTORY WARMING

Of the Oldham Workhouse Infirmary, near Manchester, by means of the Manchester Grates:—

Dr. Patterson, M.D., says that there are 32 of the MANCHESTER GRATES in the above Infirmary, giving to everyone the utmost satisfaction.—(Vide The Field, December 20, 1879.)

The Patent Manchester Stoves and Grates are now working at the following and numerous other places:

At H.M.G. Offices; Royal Naval College, Greenwich; the Royal Observatory; Keysham Barracks, Plymouth; the Bank of England and its Branches; Yokohama, Japan, &c., &c. Success guaranteed.

HUNDREDS of TESTIMONIALS on application, and satisfaction guaranteed. Explicit instructions sent with every order, fully illustrated.

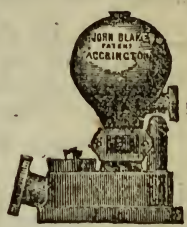
SELF-ACTING HYDRAULIC RAMS,



For Raising Water for the supply of Towns, Villages, Irrigation, Railway Stations, Mansions, Fountains, Farms.

No Cost for Motive Power, which is obtained from the Stream of Water passing through the Rams,

NO OILING OR PACKING REQUIRED.

Made in sizes to raise from 300 to 500,000 Gallons per day. Will force to a height of 1,500 ft.

Special Rams for High Falls to send up Two Gallons out of every Five Gallons passing through them.

This Ram will force a part of the same water that works it, or will force clean water from a well or spring whilst worked by a stream of impure water. Rams on this principle can be supplied to force to a height of 1,500 feet.

This Ram, for deep working falls, is capable of sending up two gallons out of every five gallons passing through it.

TESTIMONIALS.

From T. H. SIDEBOTTOM, Esq., Etherow House, Hadfield, February 22nd, 1882.

"Induced by the good report of my cousin, Mr. J. A. Sidebottom, as to the working of the Hydraulic Ram he had from you, I ordered the one you fixed here a year ago, which I am pleased to say has since worked well night and day. Yet the two rams you fixed at Snow's Hill Manor, Gloucestershire, for my brothers and myself, are I think, a still more remarkable example of your success. We had a Ram fixed by a well-known firm, which proved a miserable failure, and which your Rams displaced. They are forcing the water through three-quarters of a mile of delivery pipe, a little in excess of the quantity you guaranteed, to an elevation of 340 feet, and without the slightest hitch to the time of the last report from our tenant."

From the Right Honourable the EARL OF GRANARD, Castle Forbes, March 1st, 1880.

"The Hydraulic Ram erected for me at Castle Forbes has answered perfectly. Considering the very small fall attainable by the nature of the ground, it is a great success, and throws up water to a cistern on the top of a tower 80 feet high. When Mr. Blake first proposed to put it up I doubted the possibility of its succeeding, owing to the nature of the ground, but I have been most agreeably undeceived.—GRANARD."

From the Right Hon. the Earl of ROMNEY, 56, Eaton Place, S.W., June 12th, 1880.

"SIR,—In reply to your inquiry, I have pleasure in stating that the Hydraulic Ram which you erected for me at Gayton does its work remarkably well, and is a great success. I think the work is especially creditable to you on account of the very small fall of but 3 feet with which you had to deal, and I shall always be glad to recommend you.—Yours faithfully, ROMNEY."

From Captain GANDY, Castle Bank, Appleby, Feb. 11, 1880.

"The Self-acting Hydraulic Ram you erected for me is an excellent example of strength and good workmanship. Whilst working with 3ft. 4in. fall, it forces water 73ft. high, and so far gives me every satisfaction. It will do more work in one day than the old Ram of another make could do in a week."

From Mr. WILLIAM LAIT, Architect & County Surveyor, Compton Verney, Warwick, 16th January, 1882.

"I have very much pleasure in stating that the Patent Hydraulic Ram I had from you for the Rev. J. Cardwell Gardner, of the Vicarage, Butler's Marston, and which you fixed there is, I consider, remarkably successful, as indicated below: 4,120 gallons of water per day are passing through the Ram with a descent of 13ft. 8in. Out of this small quantity 1,080 gallons are sent up to a height of 41ft., showing 78 per cent. of useful effect, and the noise of it working is so slight as to be almost inaudible."

From V. F. BENETT-STANFORD, Esq., M.P., Pyt House, Tisbury, Wilts, August 20, 1880.

"I have no hesitation in saying your Self-acting Hydraulic Ram and apparatus for extinguishing fire, which you laid down here, including about one mile of pipes, are very satisfactory. The Ram forces upwards of 5,000 gallons per day to a service reservoir holding 25,000 gallons, at an elevation of 296ft., being 70ft. above the roof of the house, from which reservoir the water is distributed to the house, stables, home farm, and several cottages; and in case of fire, four jets can be thrown on the house from different sides at a great force and large volume. I consider your work has been done well and efficiently, and does you credit."

From JOHN ROWE BENNION, Esq., Nursted House, Petersfield, August 25th, 1880.

"I have much pleasure in saying that the two Hydraulic Rams you put down for me, and which are supplied from a spring now yielding in this dry season only 3 gallons per minute, are sending up an ample supply of water to my house and the home farm, distributing the supply through more than 2,000 ft. of pipes, and to an elevation of 137 ft. Of this result I think you have as much reason to be proud as I have to be satisfied."

From Captain TOWNSHEND, Wincham, February 10th, 1877.

"In answer to your enquiry, I am glad to say the Hydraulic Ram you sent me in November, 1875, is working exceedingly well, and gives no trouble. It will work when quite immersed, as it has been several times during the floods this winter, forcing up water through a delivery pipe 900 yards long at the rate of 80,000 gallons per day, although you only promised 50,000."

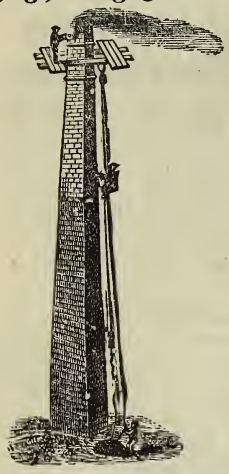
JAMES A. MATTHEWS'
PATENT SEMI-DRY BRICK MAKING MACHINE.

THIS Machine is especially designed for making Bricks from ground clay from a mill with a perforated bottom, or from an ordinary mill with an elevator and revolving riddle, so as to make all the particles of one consistency throughout, this being done with no more moisture than is found in a natural face of clay, shale, or fire-clay; or with no more moisture than is necessary to hold the particles together when they are tightly pressed in the hand. The prepared clay is fed into the trunk of the machine from the riddle or elevator, where it is formed into a properly shaped block, with all the angles as perfectly shaped as a planed block of wood, being subjected to A VERY GREAT PRESSURE, and delivered at the front of the machine, ready for walling at once in the kiln, at the rate of 14 PER MINUTE, OR 840 PER HOUR.

The material lying in the hill can be formed into bricks ready for burning in the kiln in ten minutes' time. Two men getting at the face, one man filling at the mill pan, and one boy taking off from the machine, will be all the hands required. This machine is well arranged for forming blocks of cement or any other material of like particles. It will also make bricks, flooring tiles, or blocks of cement ANY THICKNESS, from 1½ up to 3¼ inches, both inclusive. The material receives two distinct pressures while in the mould, thus expelling the air and making the brick very solid.



These are the only Machines which give two distinct pressures before the brick or piston leaves the mould. Also that will make Projection Bricks on or off the bed, at one revolution of the machine. The Pistons are heated by steam, therefore no oil is used on the face of the pistons as in common presses.

LININGS TO MAKE ALMOST ANY SHAPE OR SIZE OF BRICKS REQUIRED (HAVING PARALLEL SIDES) CAN BE INSERTED IN THE ABOVE MACHINE BY WHITTAKER'S EXPANDING MOULD.

GEOLOGY

COUNTIES OF ENGLAND,

AND OF

NORTH AND SOUTH WALES,

By W. JEROME HARRISON, F.G.S.,

Science Demonstrator for the Birmingham School Board, late Curator Leicester Town Museum.

To the detailed description of the Geological features of each County there are added lists of the local Scientific Societies, Museums, Maps and Memoirs of the Geological Survey, and the more important books and papers written by private workers.

[SPECIMEN.]

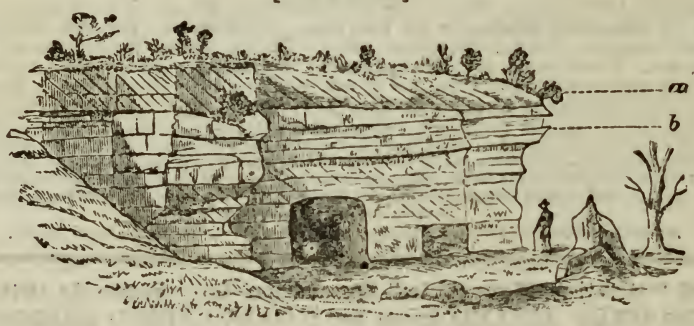

Fig. 91. Quarry at Yatton Keynell, near Corsham.

a Forest Marble. Fissile shelly oolite, resting obliquely on the Great Oolite; 4 feet.
b Great Oolite (upper zone). Regularly bedded massive shelly limestone; 7 feet.
c Great Oolite (lower zone). Shelly oolite, full of false bedding. The upper part coarse; the lower affording very fine building stone, which is followed underground; 16 feet.

The Forest Marble (with Bradford Clay).—The strata which own this name occupy a considerable surface area in the north and west of Wiltshire. From Bradford-on-Avon and Corsham (where they are well exposed in the railway cutting), they run northward to Tetbury, and then turning north-east form a tract some 5 or 6 miles wide, on which stand the villages of Ashley, Crudwell, and Kemble. The strata are a variable series of shelly limestones, sands and clays, about (Fig. 91) 60 feet thick near Tetbury, but thickening as they are followed southwards.

REVIEWS.

"We have tested it in many ways, and find that in almost every case the latest information even when published in journals of very restricted circulation, has been discovered and made use of. There are numerous excellent woodcuts.... We can heartily recommend this book as a convenient and reliable work of reference."—Nature.

"The plan of this volume is novel. As its name implies, it is a geology of 'the counties.' In other words it deals with each county in alphabetical order, and describes in a manner at once concise and lucid the principal characteristics of its geological formations, their fossils, and economic products..... It need hardly be said that Mr. Harrison writes with a scientific skill and authority of admitted weight."—Leicester Chronicle and Mercury.

Geology of the Counties of England and Wales, by W. J. Harrison, F.G.S.—"We sincerely compliment Mr. Harrison on producing a good and much required work of geology, which will save a student, not only much personal research and time, but put him on the track of almost everything geological which England and Wales can offer to him."—Science Gossip.

"..... It is obvious that a work full of local details and laden with references is of little value unless scrupulously accurate. Can we, then, rely upon Mr. Harrison's volume as a trustworthy guide? To this question we are able to return a very practical answer. It is now several months since the work was published, and during that time we have had frequent occasion to consult its pages, to check its references, and to put its information to the test. It is a pleasure to state that, so far as our investigation has gone, we can unhesitatingly pronounce the book to be in every way a trustworthy compilation."—The Academy.

"A new interest will thus be attached to the summer holiday or the rural excursion, and with a degree of mental effort, too slight to be otherwise than agreeable, a progress of education may be continually going forward. Taking each county in turn, the writer has carefully indicated the principal rock-masses, or geological formations, tracing a strata more or less minutely, with the position and direction of the beds..... The tyro in geology who chooses any part of Wales for his summer outing will find in Mr. Harrison a guide who will bring him face-to-face with Nature in her most primitive and characteristic haunts."—Saturday Review.

HISTORY OF ROME

AND OF THE ROMAN PEOPLE,

FROM ITS ORIGIN TO THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE CHRISTIAN EMPIRE;

BY

VICTOR DURUY,

MEMBER OF THE INSTITUTE, EX-MINISTER OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION, etc.

(Translated by W. J. CLARKE, Esq., M.A.);

EDITED BY THE

REV. J. P. MAHAFFY,

PROFESSOR OF ANCIENT HISTORY, TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN.

Containing about 3,000 Engravings, 100 Maps and Plans, and numerous Chromo-Lithographs by Goupil, Percy and others.

"The merits of M. Duruy's work are so widely acknowledged that it is not necessary to enter upon any lengthened statement showing the great range of historical research displayed in it, or upon any fresh eulogy of the author's power of exposition and illustration. It deals confidently and plausibly with the elucidation of all that is obscure in the great borderland between the pre-historic and the historic. There could be no better New Year's Day present to a student than the magnificent edition of M. Duruy's 'History of the Romans,' the fifth volume of which (dealing with the period 117 to 180 A.D.) has just been issued. It is a book well arranged, well written, well printed, and well illustrated."—Times.

"Messrs. Kelly & Co. have undertaken to present the public with an English translation of Victor Duruy's splendid work on the 'History of Rome,' and to present it in a form which will secure for it as good a place in all English bookcases as the original holds in France. The work has been translated by Mr. W. J. Clarke, M.A., and edited as it is by Professor Mahaffy, we have, with Messrs. Kelly & Co. as publishers, the best of all guarantees that the work, when complete—it is to appear in monthly numbers—will be all that such a work ought to be. The illustrations and letterpress of the specimen number before us are perfect."—Yorkshire Post.

"This important historical work is well known in its original French edition. At the present moment it is being re-issued in the English, Spanish and Portuguese languages, and cannot fail to meet with a warm acknowledgment both in this country and the United States, as well as in Spain and Portugal. Considering that it gives the history of Rome and the Roman people from the origin of the city to the establishment of the Christian Empire, with 3,000 engravings, 100 maps and plans, and numerous chromo-lithographs, the price is certainly highly moderate. The author, M. Duruy, is a member of the French Institute and ex-Minister of Public Instruction in France, while his English editor is Professor of Ancient History in Trinity College, Dublin. Both in the text and the footnotes we have abundant evidence of the author's research, while the thoroughness with which he enters into his whole subject, judging at least by this first part, convinces us that this work is not likely to be surpassed for many years. The illustrations are really fine specimens of engraving; and, in the case of the medals, coins, and statues especially, have quite an educational value. They help in a really wonderful manner the author's exposition, and contribute to make this book one of the most important text-books on historical, and especially on Roman, literature we have seen in this country for many years."—Liverpool Mercury.

"M. Duruy's work is absolutely splendid as a literary production, absolutely incomparable as a work of art, and absolutely exhaustive as a history of research. It is translated by W. J. Clarke, Esq., M.A., and edited by the Rev. J. P. Mahaffy, F.T.C.D., to both of whom, as well as to the publishers, the greatest credit is due for the letterpress, the style, and the form of the issue; because no one could possibly deny that the engravings, maps, and plans of Part I. are unique in themselves."—Freeman's Journal.

"Duruy's 'History of Rome' is one of the best-known works of its class in the French language, and already considered by competent judges to be a standard book of reference, M. Victor Duruy having availed himself of every possible assistance, both from the pages of the great German and Italian Roman historians, such as Niebuhr, Ottfried, Müller, and Micali, and also from the works of more recent writers, not only on Latin history and literature, but upon the Roman antiquities and late discoveries tending to throw light upon events of historical importance. Messrs. Kelly & Co. have done wisely by intrusting the task of M. Duruy's work into English to the Rev. J. P. Mahaffy, who has produced the remarkably readable and fluent version which is now appearing in monthly parts. The first part is finely produced, the type is clear, the engravings, always appropriately selected, are admirable, and the maps excellent."—Morning Post.

KELLY'S HANDBOOK

TO THE

Titled, Landed, and Official Classes,

CONTAINING ABOUT

TWENTY THOUSAND NAMES,

GIVES AN ALPHABETICAL LIST OF

ALL MEMBERS OF NOBLE FAMILIES, BISHOPS, PRIVY COUNCILLORS, BARONETS, MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, LORDS-LIEUTENANT, GOVERNORS OF COLONIES.
KNIGHTS AND COMPANIONS OF ORDERS, DEANS, AND ARCHDEACONS, JUDGES, SERJEANTS-AT-LAW, QUEEN'S COUNSEL, ETC.
SUPERIOR OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
COUNTY MAGISTRATES, AND OWNERS OF THE PRINCIPAL SEATS IN ENGLAND.

Price to Subscribers, 10s. Non-Subscribers, 12s.

The object of this Book is to include, in one general alphabetical list, all those who have any definite position, or title, from Hereditary rank, or order conferred on them by the Sovereign, or from any of the higher grades of the Military, Naval, Legal, Clerical, or Colonial Services of the State; also Deputy Lieutenants, Royal Academicians, Presidents and Vice-Presidents of Learned Societies, and County Court Judges. It is to be observed that it is the only book which enables any one, by reference to a single list, to determine whether any person having a particular title exists, and if so, to discover his residence.

One of those useful books of reference which are indispensable to the upper classes. The correction of names and all the new titles of distinction are brought down to the latest date.—Era, March 24*th*, 1883.

"Kelly's Handbook" is an alphabetical list of the various classes indicated in the title-page, and has taken ground of its own, owing to the simplicity of the arrangement, as well as the fulness of the information, comprised in the compass of a moderate-sized volume.—Field, March 17*th*, 1883.

Alphabetically arranged and scrupulously correct, it is, without exception or rival, the most handy and trustworthy volume to which to refer for a brief biographical notice, the rank and social status, the country seat and town residence of every person of distinction in the realm.—Civil Service Gazette, March 17*th*, 1883.

The corrections have been brought down to the end of January, and the volume will, no doubt, be found equal in accuracy to any of its predecessors.—Army and Navy Gazette, March 10*th*, 1883.

It is by far the readiest book of reference of the kind issued, and is very nicely got up.—Daily Chronicle, March 7*th*, 1883.

As a ready reference book as to family matters of general public interest, "Kelly's Handbook" is of much value.—Observer, March 25*th*, 1883.

With so comprehensive a collection, entries are necessarily brief, but leading facts, sufficient for the identification of each individual, are clearly and accurately set forth.—Lloyd's Weekly London Newspaper, March 11*th*, 1883.

Edited though it is with evident care, it runs almost into 1,000 pages. The accuracy of its facts have borne the tests we have put it to.—Sunday Times, March 25*th*, 1883.
